3 Votes Save Hatch Act From Death In Senate

Party Lines Split As South Supports Attack With Aid Of Senator Minton

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

In a breathtaking climax to two days' debate, the Senate yesterday turned down by a three-vote margin a determined Democratic effort to weaken the present Hatch Act by allowing Federal officeholders to engage in politics.

On the same vote, 41 to 44, the Senate disapproved an attempt to block extension of the politics ban to District, State and local employes paid from Federal funds.

Offered by Senator Miller (Democrat), of Arkansas, the double-barrelled proposal defeated yesterday was generally considered as the rallying point of opposition to the original law and to the present endeavor of its author, Senator Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico, to enlarge its scope.

After the vote, so close it left spectators fairly gasping, victory was freely predicted on both sides for the pending bill, which would prohibit political activity to at least 250,000 Federally-paid State employes.

Minton Fights for Move

With Democratic ranks split wide open on an issue of great importance in this election year, Majority Leader Barkley made an impassioned speech against the Miller amendment, while Majority Whip Minton fought strenuously in its behalf.

When the smoke of battle cleared, there were recorded 23 Democrats, 18 Republicans, 1 Independent, 1 Progressive and 1 Farmer-Laborite in opposition to the Miller proposal; while its defenders numbered 40 Democrats and 1 Republican.

The heavy Democratic vote in favor of the amendment was rolled up despite the warning of the majority leader that its adoption would give the Nation's independent voters an opportunity to accuse the party of "marching back down the hill" in order to reap political benefits from Democratic officeholders.

Every Democrat from the deep South who cast a vote was in favor of the amendment, except two—Senators Overton, of Louisiana, and Russell, of Georgia. It was explained that many of the Southerners felt that State's rights were being invaded by the politics ban on Federally-paid State employes.

Virginians For It

Both Virginia Senators, Glass and Byrd, voted for the Miller proposal, while Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, opposed it. Senator Radcliffe (Democrat), of Maryland, was not present. The lone Republican who favored the amendment was Senator Gurney, of South Dakota.

As the clerk proceeded with the roll call, the "yeas" forged well ahead, and at one time had a 9-vote lead over the "nays," but when the last vote was counted, the amendment had been nosed out.

Immediately afterward, Senator Danaher (Republican), of Connecticut, proposed an amendment granting to governmental employes accused of violating the law the right to appeal to the Federal District Court. Under the bill as it now stands, the Civil Service Commission makes final determination as to infringement.

A standing vote on the amendment was taken, and Senator Schwartz (Democrat), of Wyoming, who was in the chair, said it had been defeated; but his ruling met the intense opposition of several Senators. For some minutes, the

Aerial Photos Taken in Fog By Television

By Sam Scavisky
Post Staff Writer

New York, March 6.—The first successful aerial television broadcast from an airplane to 10,000 receiving sets in the New York vicinity today opened unlimited possibilities in aviation and radio.

Tom Hardin, chairman of the Air Safety Board, who flew here with a group of Washington officials and newspapermen to witness the demonstration, declared that aerial television may become an important factor in eliminating air safety problems through two-way television between plane and airbase. He pointed out that aerial television held out hope of penetrating fog, foremost of aviation obstacles. It might soon be possible, he said, for airports to transmit a picture of the landing field to incoming planes despite fog by means of infra-red rays.

Observers, who included Army, Navy, radio and aviation officials, suggested that telecasts from the

Nichols Calls Vote Seekers Inconsistent

Says They 'Blow Hot And Cold' in Favoring Bonded Debt Ban

By James D. Secrest
Post Staff Writer

Local suffrage proponents were accused of "blowing hot and cold" yesterday by Representative Jack Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, acting chairman of the House subcommittee on District reorganization, when they suggested continuation of the ban on bonded indebtedness even though the franchise is granted.

Nichols questioned several civic organization spokesmen about their opinions as to whether the District should be allowed to issue bonds in order to obtain municipal improvements, and asked them if they wanted Congress to retain taxing and appropriating powers for the National Capital.

Urge Elective Council

When the witnesses said they believed Congress should retain this control of the city's purse strings, the chairman asked how they expected to obtain money for new schools and other Capital improvements that have been requested.

The civic spokesmen responded that an elective council would be able to present the wishes of the majority of District residents more effectively to Congress than do appointed commissioners.

Representative Nichols also cracked down on Sidney R. Katz, secretary-treasurer of the Maryland-District Industrial Union, when the witness charged that the present District government is "a form of dictatorship."

"What form of dictatorship do you know of that gives citizens the

Snow Predicted Today for D. C., Much of East

Light snow tonight and more tomorrow was predicted by the Weather Bureau last night. Slightly colder temperatures were expected to accompany the snowfall.

The prediction of snow or snowflurries was general along the Eastern seacoast, the forecast placing New York well within the snow area, which covered States as far west as Ohio.

Yesterday's temperatures in the District ranged from 35 to 44 degrees.

House to Get Labor Act Report Today

Smith Committee Split on Revisions; Difficulty Forecast For Proposals

Proposed changes in the Wagner Labor Relations Act, source of bitter controversy for many months, will be submitted to the House today by three of the five members of the Smith Committee after weeks of hearings.

Protracted efforts within the committee yesterday failed to bring unanimous agreement on the suggested changes, and the report will be submitted by Democratic Chairman Smith, of Virginia, and the two Republican members of the committee, Representatives Halleck, of Indiana, and Routzohn, of Ohio.

Representatives Healey, of Massachusetts, and Murdock, of Utah, both Democrats, disagreeing with the majority, said they would file a statement of their views.

Difficulty Forecast

Chairman Smith, announcing the majority's intent, said Healey and Murdock "have not been able to agree with the rest of the committee" but he insisted that the long sessions of the committee "have been harmonious."

The committee decision followed a White House visit by Smith, but it was indicated that efforts to obtain Administration backing for the proposed changes in the set-up and authority of the National Labor Relations Board had been unavailing.

The Labor Act amendments will encounter immediate difficulty if they are referred, as is expected, to the House Labor Committee, whose chairman is Representative Mary Norton, of New Jersey. Miss Norton has repeatedly opposed considering any changes in the law until the Smith committee has completed its investigation of the board's administration of the act.

Intermediate Report

Today's report will be in the nature of an intermediate one, since the Smith group intends to do further investigating.

Faced with the Labor Committee hostility, advocates of drastic Wagner Act changes last night were discussing resort to petitions to take the amendments from Mrs. Norton's committee unless they are acted on promptly.

While Smith said the nature of the proposed changes would not be made public until noon today, it is known that suggestions considered, apparently with favor by the majority, included:

Replacement of the personnel of the present three-member board with one of possibly five members.

Prosecution Division

Creation of a prosecution division, separate from the administrative organization, whose director would be appointed by the President with Senate confirmation.

Relieving the board of jurisdiction in cases of conflicting claims between the A. F. L. and the C. I. O. and provision for mediation or arbitration.

A limitation, possibly six months, on the time for which the board may enforce payment of back pay.

Restrictions on powers of aliens in representing employes in disputes with employers.

Some safeguards for existing unions even though they represent a minority of employes.

The provision for a separate prosecution division would be intended to meet the complaint that the Labor Relations Board now is prosecutor, judge and jury at the same time.

Attack on Ice Fails as Bombs Smash Footing, Drown Many

By K. J. Eskelund.

Helsinki, March 6.—The Finns yesterday succeeded in driving back the Soviet forces from the footing they gained on the west side of the Bay of Viipuri and a dangerous situation was thereby eased.

The Russians are now concentrating on sending several divisions across the ice behind tank columns and covered by fierce artillery fire and more than 100 bombers. It seems the Russian plan is to encircle the new Finnish lines north of Viipuri to Vuoski, but the Finns have now drawn their heavy artillery up to the west side of the bay.

Sanguinary fighting raged all day yesterday on the ice in the western part of the bay. Several Soviet infantry divisions took part in the incessant attacks, preceded by long rows of tanks. Many of these latter are today at the bottom of the bay.

Several Finnish planes effectively participated in the fighting. Time and again they prevented further Russian advances by bombing the ice in front of the Russian troops. Every bomb tore a mighty hole in the ice and time and again whole ice fields capsized, submerging Russian men and material. At sundown the ice was covered with Russian dead.

New Effort Foreseen

Despite their heavy losses the Russians will undoubtedly again try to cross the bay. As proved by their fantastic attacks from Hogland Island against the south Finnish coast on Monday, they can afford to squander human lives.

The Russians have evidently temporarily given up their attempt to take Viipuri and are concentrating their attacks on the western part of the bay. In the east at Poellakkala they are attempting to flank the Finnish positions north of Viipuri as well as the positions along the Vuoksi Lake line.

As previously at Taipale, near Lake Ladoga, where the Vuoski waterway has another narrow stretch, the Russians hope at Poellaekkala to batter their way across the ice and break the east wing of the line. At Taipale more than 5,000 Russians were killed early in the war, and now thousands more are being hurled into the Finnish fire similarly at Poellaekkala. After only a few days' fighting there, the Soviet forces are reported attacking over heaps of their dead.

[The Russian communique said "nothing of importance" occurred Wednesday, the Associated Press reported from Moscow.]

Viipuri, empty and largely in flames, is being shelled night and day. An officer who passed through the outskirts of the city three days

British Seize Italian Coal On 14 Ships

100,000 Tons Taken Off Colliers Held At Contraband Port

Copyright by New York Times

London, March 6.—Britain carried out promptly and to the limit tonight its threat to seize German coal found in Italian ships, despite loud protests from Premier Mussolini.

The enemy exports committee ordered that 100,000 tons of German coal in 14 Italian ships at the contraband control base should be unloaded immediately and held in prize until the end of the war.

One other Italian ship was allowed to proceed to Genoa with 8,300 tons of German coal because she left Rotterdam before midnight, March 1—the deadline after which Britain ordered shipments seized.

The decision to seize the coal was taken by the British under an order in council passed last November which stipulated that as a result of Germany's unrestricted sea war, Britain maintained the right to seize all German exports.

Seizures Indicate Reply

It was believed in Italian circles here until the last moment that Britain would submit to the Italian protest and allow the cargoes to pass through the blockade.

Meanwhile, the government was taking its time in answering the Italian protest, which a foreign office spokesman said was all Britain had expected.

The cabinet is giving "careful consideration" to its reply, the spokesman said, but the probable nature of the British response seemed clear.

The view here is simply that German exports must be seized, regardless of protests from Italy or anywhere else.

Officials of the ministry of economic warfare today quoted facts and figures to prove that the de-

World's Biggest Ship Eludes Submarines In Swift Voyage

By the Associated Press

New York, March 6.—The $28,750,000 British liner Queen Elizabeth, biggest ship afloat, neared the neutral sanctuary of New York harbor tonight after a secret and audacious maiden voyage from England across the perilous North Atlantic.

The 85,000-ton vessel, still not wholly completed, will arrive off quarantine, within New York Harbor, at 7 a. m. tomorrow, and will dock about 9:30 a. m. at West Fiftieth street.

There she will be berthed alongside the next-best in the British merchant fleet, the 81,000-ton Queen Mary, and the mightiest of French liners, the 83,000-ton Normandie, both of which have lain here idle since the war broke out.

Fifty patrolmen and mounted policemen and five sergeants were ordered to report at 8 a. m. at the pier.

Run Kept Secret

The Elizabeth began her run for it under conditions of the utmost secrecy—and all but ended it the same way. It was not until late this afternoon that reports appeared here that she was on the way, an hour or so before the report was confirmed in London.

This confirmation came only after the liner was judged to be safe beyond question and seemed immediately to point to one of these conclusions:

That the submarine menace in the Atlantic was not as great as had appeared earlier in the war; that the Elizabeth's great speed had been a vital factor—her top is assumed to be about 30 knots—or that her convoy was impregnable.

Target of Bombers

Nowhere in the war's six-month history thus far had there been such a feat by a merchant ship, save the long, furtive and half incredible chase led the British navy by the German liner Bremen before she arrived last December 12 safe in a German port.

The Elizabeth—which had been reported in maritime circles here to have been the repeated target of German bombers in her fitting-out basin on Clydebank—left without passengers and seemingly unarmed.

Although she left her fitting-out station ten days ago, the trip itself was said to have been accom-

King to Call On Rumania For 'Sacrifices'

To Open Parliament Today With Appeal For Defense Funds

By the Associated Press

Bucharest (Thursday), March 7. King Carol II will open a session of Parliament today with an appeal to his people to prepare for great sacrifices for the defense of their frontiers, it was learned today.

Approved in a long crown council meeting last night, the monarch's plea to his subjects, it was reported, will project huge new tax increases for the national defense in a nation already driven hard to support an army of 1,600,000 men.

King Carol was expected to reiterate his iron will to defend all of Rumania's frontiers to the bitter end and to call on the nation henceforth to put the army ahead of all other concerns.

The crown council's meeting followed the statement of a high authority that Great Britain had made a new proposal to Rumania, suggesting she receive equal treatment with Germany in Rumanian exports, including oil.

Rumanian Minister Viroel Tilea was reported en route here from London with Britain's new proposal.

Diplomats believed Rumania was closer than ever to the necessity of casting her lot either with the Allies or with Germany. Rumania has contracted with Germany for 1,600,000 tons of oil in 1940 and economic experts said it would be

Otto, Brother To Be Tea Guests At White House

Archduke Otto of Hapsburg, claimant to the throne of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, will be the guest of President and Mrs. Roosevelt at tea at the White House at 5 p. m. tomorrow.

This was revealed yesterday by Stephen T. Early, White House press secretary, who said the Archduke would be accompanied by his younger brother, Archduke Felix. William C. Bullitt, Ambassador to France, will escort the pair to the White House and will remain for the tea.

Sweden Go-Between

By Harold Callender.
Copyright by New York Times

Stockholm, March 6.—It was learned on the highest authority here tonight that Russia's terms for ending the Finnish war have been submitted to Helsinki through the Swedish government and are now being considered.

In some quarters it was suggested an armistice might come within a few days; others believed the Finnish army would resist if the Finnish government should be inclined to accept too-harsh terms.

It was reported tonight that Josef Stalin had proposed to annex the whole of the Karelian Isthmus and Lake Ladoga, including Sortavala and Viipuri, with a naval base at Hango and wanted also a slice of Finnish territory in the Petsamo region.

Fear of Allies Moves Reds

Some regarded these terms as extremely stiff and as impairing Finnish independence, but others thought that anything less than complete domination of Finland would be a concession on Stalin's part.

The Swedes believe Stalin would prefer peace on such terms to a continuation of the war with the risk of Allied intervention. This risk was the main argument used to persuade the Russians, it is said. Swedish sources say mediation was undertaken by Sweden alone, although other quarters thought Germany had had a hand in it.

For the last 24 hours it has been believed here that the situation would come to a head within a week or so; first, because the Allies seemed determined to send land and air forces to Finland; second, because the Swedes seemed to be pressing for mediation before such extension of the war took place.

Involvement Feared

The Swedes feared that if the Allies forced the issue, Sweden must be drawn into the war, not only as an ally of Finland, but as an ally of Britain and France. Germany apparently had made it clear that she would regard it as a hostile act for Sweden to permit any considerable number of Allied troops to cross her territory, whether as volunteers or not.

The Swedes believed such permission might bring an attack by Germany on Sweden. On the other hand, if Sweden should defend her neutrality by resisting the passage of British or French troops she would—as the Stockholm Tidningen expressed it today—be in the gro-

Better Watch the British!

20 More White House Police Sought as Fire Safeguard

It is now nearly a century and a half since the British invaders put the torch to the White House and left nothing but the scarred walls standing.

Nevertheless, those responsible for the safety of the President and others living in America's most famous home are still worried about the possibility of fire.

Frank J. Wilson, chief of the United States Secret Service, yesterday cited the fire danger as one argument for adding 20 policemen to the White House force, increasing it to 80. The House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, before which he appeared, approved a bill for the increase.

"It's a very old building," said Chief Wilson, "and we must do everything in our power to protect it and its valuable furnishings from fire."

He also pointed out that nearly 1,500,000 persons visited the White House last year. Fifty-two thousand of these flocked there for the Easter Monday egg-rolling. On many other days, as many as 5,000 tourists went through the mansion in a two-hour period.

In the 148-year history of the White House, there have been two serious fires—the one started by the British in the Madison Administration and the Christmas Eve conflagration of 1929 in the Hoover regime.

The Madisons got away in time—the vivacious Dolly, according to legend, carrying off George Washington's portrait—and the Hoovers were in no danger, since the fire was in the old executive offices built in Teddy Roosevelt's time.

There have been three minor fires since Franklin D. Roosevelt moved into the 1600 block of Pennsylvania avenue.

On September 7, 1933, while Mrs. Roosevelt was holding a conference of the "1933 Mobilization for Human Needs," an awning over one of the windows of the East Room caught fire. A workman using a torch to remove old paint was re-

Swedish Army Mission Orders 100,000 Gas Masks in U. S.

By John G. Norris

Placement of an order in this country for 100,000 gas masks for war-threatened Sweden was revealed last night by its arms purchasing mission here.

Delivery of the masks, to cost about $800,000, will start within a few weeks, a member of the mission stated. The name of the company receiving the order was withheld. At the same time, several contracts, totaling $750,000, for telephone cables, were concluded, it was said.

Army officials here expressed gratification at the announcement, in view of inadequate facilities for manufacturing gas masks now existing. Until recently the Government arsenal at Edgewood, Md., has been almost the only source of military masks. The Swedish order should increase considerably the ability of American industry to turn out masks in an emergency, it was stated.

Meanwhile Air Corps officers disclosed that changes in the design of new American Army planes has been ordered in the light of lessons of the European war.

Conferences of ranking Army experts have decided to equip bombers with armorplate and install self-sealing gas tanks. Tests are now underway at Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio, on several types of

Brown to Answer Charges Of Lax Liquor Enforcement

Complaints of the use of "rookie" policemen as ABC Board inspectors and charges of lax enforcement will be aired today by the Eberharter subcommittee when Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, and Lieut. Earl Hartman, chief of the liquor squad, testify.

Chairman Herman Eberharter (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, said he probably will call members of the ABC Board as next witnesses. After that, the course of the inquiry is uncertain.

After Frank Sartwell, spokesman for the Alcoholic Beverage Council, had defended the ABC Board and the present administration of the alcoholic beverage act, Representative John C. Shafer (Republican), of Wisconsin, disclosed that he is gathering data preparatory to asking a congressional investigation of what he termed "a national whisky trust."

Declaring that he had evidence of political responsibility for monopolistic control of distillers and the importing business, Shafer said he considered it futile to ask for an inquiry so long as the Democrats are in control of the House.

Chairman Eberharter and other members of the subcommittee cross-examined Sartwell regarding the setup of the Alcoholic Beverage Council and complaints of violations of ABC regulations. Eberharter observed that the council,

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

Palm Beach, March 7.

Hundreds of dark sunglasses along the Florida beaches are focused these days on Sandburg's "Lincoln—The War Years." As the prime political literature of 1940 the $20, four-volume work is pulling ahead of the hundreds of GOP speeches which Franklyn Waltman distributes free from Republican headquarters.

Harlan Miller

On trains, ships and hotel porches Sandburg's book has taken the place once held by "Anthony Adverse." "Gone With the Wind" and "Grapes of Wrath." More than 20,000 copies (or sets) have been sold, or over $400,000 worth. To homespun Carl Sandburg this must be bewildering success.

* * * *

Such a triumph has naturally drawn Mr. Sandburg to Florida—along with Garbo, John L. Lewis, Mrs. Roosevelt, and hundreds of lesser successes. He is here to get an LL. D. degree—his first.

* * * *

And he finds George Ade, in Miami, declining to make a speech—too busy reading "The War Years;" George M. Cohan refusing to sing at a club party—too busy reading "The War Years," and President Bob Hutchins, of Chicago, welcoming long, once-dreaded train rides—they give him a chance to read "The War Years."

"—America focuses on Carl's Abe"

A few stubborn spirits think they can read 200 pages a day, finish the 2,500 pages in a fortnight.

Others find 100 pages a day quite an undertaking, with so much to absorb in every paragraph. At that rate it'll take a month, what with time out for eating and changing clothes.

Then there are the moderates, who are willing to stop at a chapter a day and finish it in two months and a half.

* * * *

Probably every four-volume set is being read by four people simultaneously, a volume at a time, with a wait for the next one. I know of volumes being mailed back and forth between distant cities; Senators mailing them to their sons, and telegraphing to send volume four back post-haste.

* * * *

Some people are buying the book on the installment plan, $2 or $2.50 or $5 a month.

Others are clubbing together, four or five or ten families together, with a time limit for each per volume, and lots drawn for first chance at the first volume.

Some are willing to begin with the second or third or fourth, or go back to Sandburg's "The Prairie Years."

* * * *

Lincoln is, of course, the one native, indigenous, American religion, and Sandburg's is the book of revelations.

Someone has estimated that it contains 200,000 sentences, with an average of two facts to the sentence. That would be 80 sentences to the page, which seems high; but I doubt not that it contains a quarter of a million facts at least.

* * * *

It was a heroic task, colossal. How did he ever finish it?

"I think probably because after doing the preliminary work," Sandburg says, "I spent the best ten years of my life—from 50 to 60—producing it."

* * * *

"I call it the best," he adds, "because when you're 50 you're still in full vigor physically, and at 60 you're not too worn out. I, I had attempted it younger, my experience would not have been so great.

"If I had waited longer my physical energy would not have been sufficient."

"—back to Lincoln and nature"

This has been a capricious season in Florida, and the tourists tell me it has been wise to have a good book to fall back on.

* * * *

Myself, I'd rather read "The War Years" than catch an 8-foot tarpon or all the sailfish or marlin between here and Bimini. (Yes, I'm reading "The War Years;" two chapters a day; expect to finish it in 40 or 50 days.)

* * * *

The book helps clarify the confusions of 1940. And when your eyes grow weary you can go out and relax on the beach or watch the flamingo, egrets, ducks, heron, pelican and geese in the marshes and bayous . . .

At the end of a chapter yesterday I went out and saw two natives capture an alligator beside a drainage ditch, wire its jaws together and stow it in their luggage compartment.

That brought me back to the 1940 campaign with a vengeance. Is it possible to wire together a campaign orator's jaws?

No Sabotage Indicated

Both Parties Claim Gains In Grass Roots

Wallace Says G. O. P. Victory in Iowa Confirms Gallup Poll

By Robert C. Albright

Post Staff Writer

Republicans and Democrats crossed swords yesterday in a battle of statistics and claims over trends in grass roots voting.

Republicans retained Iowa's traditionally G. O. P. Sixth District House seat, but both parties claimed comfort in returns from Tuesday's special Des Moines Congressional election.

While G. O. P. spokesmen catalogued the results as added evidence of a Republican upturn and forecast Republican control of the next year, Democrats just as cheerfully announced: "The Republican tide is halted."

Wallace Cites Gallup Poll

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, whose home is Des Moines, declared that with due allowance made for the Iowa district's Republican record, and the farm program sympathies of the G. O. P. candidate, the returns confirmed the accuracy of Gallup Poll showing of a 55 per cent Democratic strength throughout the Nation.

Countered House Republican Leader Joe Martin:

"Figure it anyway you want to, it shows a continuation of Republican gains. Outside of that, we don't claim the Iowa election was particularly significant. The Republican trend is still on, and I am now confident Republicans will organize the House in 1941."

Vote Is 60 Per Cent Republican

Last returns from the Des Moines district showed Robert K. Goodwin, Republican Mayor of Redfield, Iowa, polled 29,391 votes, against 18,889 for Byron G. Allen, the Democratic entry, or 60.2 per cent of the total vote for Goodwin.

The Republican Congressional committee said this was a gain over the 58.5 per cent Republican vote in the 1938 election. Democrats retorted that this shift was inconsequential, and when allowances were made for Goodwin's pro-AAA sympathies, there was no shift at all.

Despite defeat, which they said they had discounted, spokesmen for the Democratic Congressional campaign committee took an optimistic view of the Iowa returns, in marked contrast to the general Democratic silence that followed Republican capture last week of the Seventeenth Ohio District, with a 7 per cent vote gain.

"Cotton Ed" Favors Hull

Meantime, the Capitol continued to buzz with third term discussion. Senator Smith (Democrat), of South Carolina, said if he had talked to the President, which he had not since the "purge," he would have indorsed Secretary of State Hull for President over every other Democrat mentioned, "and that goes for the present occupant of the White House."

Mayor Maury Maverick, of San Antonio, Tex., a former ardent House New Dealer, called at the White House "as a humble citizen," he said, to ask the President to run for a third term. The President's reply was silence, which Maverick said he would like to hope meant consent.

Harrison Gives Lunch

Postmaster General Farley and Vice President Garner were guests at the Capitol with several Democratic Senators at a Mississippi terrapin luncheon given by Senator Harrison. The Mississippi Senator said politics were never seriously discussed.

Senator Donahey (Democrat), of Ohio, declined to accept President Roosevelt's suggestion that he run again either for reelection to the Senate or for Governor of Ohio. Donahey, who last week announced his decision to retire, said "I appreciate the honor he does me, but I intend to carry out my plans to quit."

Senator Smith said of Hull, "He's about as near a real American as we've got in public life."

Smith, "kidded" by the President Tuesday as one to whom he might have given a "I-will-not-run interview," said he had never thought the President would run, but recently has been "somewhat baffled."

Wallace Cites Figures

"He may accept all of the adulation that comes, and then, if the situation is propitious, he may run," said Smith.

Secretary Wallace said the G. O. P. victory in Iowa "had about as much news value as the election of Hamilton Fish" might have in his traditionally Republican New York district.

Over the years Wallace contended, Democratic strength in Iowa's sixth district has always run 16 to 17 per cent under the Democratic vote for the country as a whole. On that basis, he said, the Democratic average for the country is now about 55 per cent, as reported by Dr. Gallup.

Wallace said Democratic voting power in the Sixth Iowa district in 1918 was 31 per cent of the total vote. In 1922 it was 37 per cent; 1924, 22 per cent; 1926, 23 per cent; 1930, 23.5 per cent; 1932, 43.5 per cent; 1934, 52.5 per cent; 1936, 47 per cent; 1938, 41 per cent. Tuesday's returns, he said were not quite as good as in 1932, and not greatly different from 1938.

Goodwin, the Republican winner, supported the farm program "and belongs to the 20 per cent minority in the Republican patry of which Representative Hope (Kansas), and Senate Minority Leader McNary (Oregon), are members," said Wallace. He said he concluded "that the Republican tide in the farm areas has stopped advancing."

Dewey Bids For Farm Vote In Nebraska

Offers 8-Point Program To Aid Agriculture, Assails 'Politiculture'

By Geoffrey Parsons Jr.

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Lincoln, Nebr., March 6.—District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey, of New York, tonight assailed the New Deal for allowing "politiculture" to triumph over agriculture in the last seven years and outlined an eight-point farm program of his own.

Dewey was the featured speaker at the founders' day rally of Nebraska Republicans. In the major agricultural speech of his campaign for the Republican Presidential nomination in Nebraska, he not only bowed to the importance of the agricultural Midwest in the coming Presidential election, but sought, more immediately, to better his prospects of defeating Senator Vandenberg in the Nebraska Presidential primary election April 9.

Dewey, who boasted he had worked as a "hired man on a farm" in his native State of Michigan, said he knew of "no single scheme that will solve the farm problem' overnight." He explained that his eight-point program would be unavailing unless it was accompanied by a general revival of the whole national economy.

Candidate Dewey's farm program, in its essentials, parallels the programs outlined by his two principal rivals for the Republican nomination, Senators Vandenberg and Taft, and the program recommended to the Republican Party by its program committee, headed by Dr. Glenn Frank.

Favors Crop Loans

The eight points of the Dewey program follow:

Establish a fair parity between agricultural and industrial prices.

Provide Government crop loans at reasonable levels.

Adopt a direct program of soil conservation.

Convert sub-marginal land to more economic uses.

Extend the farm cooperative movement.

Preserve the American market for American agriculture.

Continue and extend the program for marketing agreements.

Broaden research in the use of agricultural products.

Dewey arrived in Lincoln this morning to find himself in the midst of an enthusiastic, noisy crowd of Republican party workers from all over Nebraska. There were enough candidates for Republican nomination to State offices in Lincoln tonight to make up fair-sized political rally by themselves. Twenty-two candidates, for example, have entered the race for the one $5,000-a-year job of State railway commissioner, and most of them were on hand. The State went Democratic two years ago.

Talking to reporters from Middle Western newspapers and farm journals today, Dewey emphasized the labor and effort he had put into his farm program. Because of the importance of agriculture in the picture of the entire national economy, he said he had devoted at least twice as much time to its study in the last year as he had to any two other problems together.

He revealed that he would "probably" add Wisconsin to his speech-making itinerary later, this month, when he is scheduled to make campaign addresses in St. Louis and Chicago. Senator Vandenberg entered in the Wisconsin primary against Dewey. Since the Wisconsin primary falls on April 2, a week before the Nebraska primary, and is the first competitive test of Candidates Dewey and Vandenberg, it is regarded as possibly crucial in the contest for the Republican nomination.

Trade Pact Bill Will Go To Senate Floor Monday

By Russell Turner

United Press Staff Writer

Senate Democratic leaders last night decided to speed action on a House-approved resolution extending the Administration's reciprocal trade treaty program three years beyond its present June 12 expiration date by bringing the measure to the Senate floor Monday.

The decision was reached in a secret meeting of Finance Committee Democrats favoring the extension and other Democratic leaders, after which Committee Chairman Harrison (Democrat), Mississippi, said he would call his group tomorrow to approve the resolution.

The committee concluded public hearings on the extension resolution earlier in the day with Senator Pepper (Democrat), Florida, urging the program be restricted by adoption of a quota system to regulate imports.

Pepper described himself as a "friend of the Administration" in proposing the restriction. He said that agreements negotiated under the program may have benefitted some parts of the country but that Florida was one of the areas seriously injured.

Pepper testified after James Crafton Rogers of Yale University urged extension of the program as a means of promoting international stability, and after two Wisconsin representatives charged that it was "ruining" the dairy industry.

Rogers praised particularly "flexible" provisions of the trade pacts, and termed them an effective instrument for aiding a smooth flow of trade across intenational boundaries.

Representatives Murray (Republican), Wisconsin, and Hull (Progressive), Wisconsin, both testified that the dairy business fears the growing strength of milk producers in New Zealand, Holland and Australia. Hull charged that under the trade program, this country is "getting into free trade on the installment plan."

Pepper said the Cuban treaty had resulted in increased tomato exports from some parts of the United States but also had brought about an increase in carload imports of Cuban products and corresponding decreases in shipment of Florida products.

Senator La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, announced plans to introduce an amendment to the resolution providing for establishment of an export-import control board to protect American industry and agriculture. The board would be composed of the Secretaries of State, Treasury, Interior, Agriculture and Commerce.

Hill Assails Applying Trust Laws to Doctors

Junior Bar Is Told Reversal of Proctor Threatens Its Liberty

The District Court of Appeals decision holding medical organizations subject to antitrust laws yesterday was denounced as "wrong and a straw in the wind toward Government regimentation" of the professions by Francis W. Hill, president of the District Bar Association.

In an address before the junior bar section of the District Bar Association, he implied the decision could apply to legal organizations as well.

Service the Alternative

"The only way we can escape regimentation," he said during a luncheon at the Lee House, Fifteenth and L streets northwest, "is to give all possible service to the public. In the long run, what is best for the public is best for us."

Justice James M. Proctor, of District Court, told the group the proposal to provide a public defender here for impoverished defendants would mean the organization of "another political bureau."

Provision of a public defender, he said, would permit "appointment of more outsiders and eliminate members of our own bar from practice."

"You know that's what happens in our local affairs," he added.

Justice Proctor said he "could not see the Government prosecuting a man on one side and defending him on the other."

"It just doesn't seem right under our system," he explained.

He urged instead that Congress appropriate a fund from which the courts would pay lawyers to handle cases involving poor defendants.

Prefers Personal Touch

Holding the public defender system would eliminate personal contact from cases involving impoverished defendants, Justice Proctor remarked, "you can't decide how a man should plead while you are in a plush seat in an office.

"You have to have personal contact with persons under indictment, and whose good names, liberty or lives are involved, if you are going to defend them properly," he said.

While discussing the Court of Appeals decision, Hill said he thought the opinion "wrong and I hope our distinguished guest (Justice Proctor) will be upheld by the Supreme Court." Judge Proctor dismissed the indictment.

Hill added he had been much impressed by reports on the operation of standardized jury instructions in California courts.

"Such instructions apparently have brought about tremendous savings in the time of courts and lawyers and in costs to litigants," he pointed out. "I hope you will study this procedure and find out how it would fit into our program here."

D. C. Woman's Attacker Gets 30-Year Term

Former Fort Myer Soldier Convicted In Arlington Court

An Arlington County circuit court jury yesterday found James Edward Gibson, 35, former Fort Myer soldier, guilty of criminal assault on a 20-year-old Washington woman May 11 near Mount Vernon Memorial highway and sentenced him to serve 30 years in a State penitentiary.

Foreman William F. Blinco, of Arlington, announced the verdict and sentence at 6:45 p. m., after the jury had deliberated one hour.

Defense Counsel Walter I. Young said he would move today to set aside the verdict on the ground the court lacked jurisdiction. A motion he made earlier to quash the indictment for this reason was overruled.

On the stand in his own defense Gibson admitting interviewing the young woman for a secretarial position but denied attacking her.

The trial ended a six-month dispute between Federal and State governments over jurisdiction. An earlier trial in United States district court in Alexandria July 26 had been halted when Judge Robert N. Pollard ruled only the State had jurisdiction in capital crimes.

Cobbler Refuses to Answer Census Queries; Goes Free

By the Associated Press

Census Director William L. Austin ordered Wisconsin census officials late yesterday to withdraw charges against a Kenosha cobbler who was said to have refused to answer question in a business survey.

The cobbler, James Rosselli, had agreed to answer the qquestions "so long as they are put to me polite." He was arrested on a Federal warrant charging failure to give complete answers to a census taker and released on $200 bond.

Austin sent the following telegram to Donald M. Farris, census area manager at Racine:

"Withdraw Rosselli charges immediately. You have disregarded instructions that before taking legal action such cases must be submitted to Washington office for disposition. You will be held strictly responsible for this procedure. Instruct all district supervisors and enumerators accordingly. Acknowledge receipts of this telegram and confirm withdrawal of charges."

Milwaukee, Wis., March 6 (INS).—A grinning, 250-pound man wearing a green and black striped lumberjack coat and with a stubble of beard darkening his expansive face, appeared today before United States Commissioner Floyd E. Jenkins and announced:

"I'm the beeg criminal. See, I surrender just as I say I would."

It was James Rosselli, 43, of Kenosha, Wis., the first person to face prosecution for alleged refusal to answer questions in the 1940 census.

John W. Girman, the census taker on whose complaint the warrant was sworn, declared Rosselli not only declined to bare any of the financial details of his business, but chased him out of the place.

Tonight Rosselli, who served in the Italian army for five years during the World War and who became a naturalized citizen in 1927—seven years after he came to this country—was jubilant about the news from Washington.

Illegal Trade In Arms Laid To Remington

Firm, Two Mexicans Indicted for Shipping Without a License

By the Associated Press

Houston, Tex., March 6.—The Remington Arms Co., conspiring with two Mexican army officers, violated the Neutrality Act through unlicensed export of arms, the Federal Government charged today.

The allegation was contained in a Federal grand jury indictment which asserted 27,500 rounds of ammunition had been exported without a permit from the Secretary of State.

The Mexicans, in jail at Laredo, Tex., on the Rio Grande border, are:

Lieut. Col. Francisco de Valle Arispe, 40, who said he was a candidate on the National Revolutionary Party ticket, for representative in the National Congress from the state of Chahuila. Arispe also said he was chief of staff for Gen. Rodrico Quevedo and was stationed at Toluca.

Gregorio Prieto, 44-year-old retired major, who said he was in the employ of the National Revolutconare party.

They were indicted jointly with the company.

In Bridgeport, Conn., James H. Chasmar, Remington general works manager, commented:

"I can't imagine what this is all about. We've been careful to play ball with the State Department both before and since the passage of the neutrality act."

George John, Assistant United States District Attorney, said, however: "They knew where the arms were going and knew they had to have a permit."

The indictments came while Mexico was in the midst of one of the most intense presidential campaigns in its history, but John said as far as the United States was concerned, "There are no political ramifications in this case."

Federal Judge James V. Allred fixed bond for the company at $10,000 and John notified the firm by letter.

James Stuart Quits Pennsylvania Post

Harrisburg, Pa., March 6 (AP).—James Lysle Stuart, Pittsburgh contractor, today resigned his $12,000-a-year job as executive director of the General State Authority.

Stuart said that the press of private business, in building the Mellon Memorial Art Gallery at Washington, forced him to retire. He represents the National Gallery of Art trustees in construction of the gallery.

Bioff Opens Fight to Avoid Serving Term

Believed Old Case Settled, He Says At Habeas Hearing

By the Associated Press

Chicago, March 6.—William Bioff, Hollywood labor chief, began a court fight today against the State's attempt to put him in jail.

He testified at a hearing on his petition for a writ of habeas corpus that he had believed that his score with the law had been settled 18 years ago and that an old case against him had been brought up in the midst of "most important negotiations with the producers."

Bioff, film capital representative of the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employes and chairman of the Conference of Studio Unions, told how he was sentenced to six months here January 17, 1922, on a charge of pandering. He served "six or ten days," he added, before he was released on an appeal bond. His attorney informed him subsequently, he said, that "he had won the case for me."

Court records showed, however, that the appellate court affirmed the conviction February 19, 1923, but the case lay dormant until last November, when the State's attorney's office here began extradition proceedings to return Bioff to Chicago to complete the sentence. He came here voluntarily on February 20, spent two hours in the Bridewell and then gained his freedom pending the court hearing.

Bioff related that the old charge was brought back to public attention at the time when his A. F of L. unions were engaged in a "contest" with the C. I. O. over organizing motion picture workers.

"Westbrook Pegler (newspaper columnist) first wrote about me after he met with Carey McWilliams, an attorney for the C. I. O. on the West Coast," Bioff stated. "Everything was being used against us. On the morning of the most important negotiations with producers, only two hours before the meeting, I was taken into custody. I thought it was a gag. It was the biggest surprise in my life."

Betsey Roosevelt Gets Ruling Today

Los Angeles, March 6 (AP).—Mrs. Betsey Cushing Roosevelt goes to court tomorrow to learn whether Superior Judge Thomas C. Gould will grant her a divorce from James Roosevelt, the President's son.

Mrs. Roosevelt, who charged cruelty and desertion, testified Friday her husband had asked her in May, 1938, to obtain a divorce. She refused, she said, and followed him to Hollywood the following November, when he again told her he wanted his freedom "and asked me to leave California."

Henry K. Cushing, Mrs. Roosevelt's brother and her corroborating witness, was too ill to testify. He completed a deposition today in which he said of his sister: "Her attitude was one of great mental distress. She had no desire for a divorce."

2 Gaming Raid Suspects Seized A Second Time

Two men seized in a series of gaming raids last Saturday yesterday landed back in the clutches of the law charged with similar violations.

The men, Gorman W. Ewell, 32, 233 G street northwest, and George Schaiffer, 33, 204 Channing street northeast, were arrested in the 600 block Pennsylvania avenue northwest, yesterday. They were taken into custody in the same block Saturday.

Known to police as "the man in the green hat," Schaiffer was accused of setting up a gaming table, operating a lottery and possession of lottery slips, as he was after Saturday's roundup.

Ewell was charged with lottery law violations for the second time.

The suspects were arraigned before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage Monday, and their cases were continued. Bail was set at $1,500 then and a like amount was asked for their release yesterday.

House Group To Hear Black On FCA Plans

Agriculture Committee Will Question Governor On Agency's Policies

Dr. A. G. Black, governor of the Farm Credit Administration, will appear before the House Agriculture Committee today to outline policies of his agency under its new status as a branch of the Agriculture Department.

The committee's inquiry, it was understood, will cover policies of the FCA, which was transferred from independent status to the Agriculture Department under the President's reorganization order, July 31, 1939, and legislation introduced this week calling for reduced interest rates on farm loans and land bank commission loans.

While Dr. Black said he had not been informed what information he would be asked to present, it was pointed out that the governor has urged keeping the farmers on the land as the most important work of the land banks operating under the FCA.

Lenient Loan Plan Criticized

FCA plans for a more lenient loan and credit plan, developed since the merger, have been criticized by some Congressmen and farm organizations on the ground that they "mix credit with relief."

Dr. Black said merger of the FCA with the Agriculture Department does not mean soft credit, and that rehabilitating delinquent farm loans is one of the best ways to protect the investment.

Wallace Declines Goss Comment

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace told his press conference that he could not comment on the report that Albert S. Goss may resign as Land Bank commissioner of the FCA. President Roosevelt had reported the possible resignation of Goss, after the latter went to the White House, reportedly to give up his job at request of Dr. Black.

Wallace was asked whether, at his meeting with the President yesterday, he had discussed "the FCA purge." The question and phrase were repeated, and Secretary Wallace said he had "never heard of such a thing."

He said that a report Roy Green, deputy governor of the FCA, might be asked to take over Goss' post in case the latter resigned might be well founded, but that he did not know "the last word." Green, it was explained, has accepted an appointment to become head of the Colorado State College of Agriculture next September.

air would prove useful in military maneuvers, particularly in scouting enemy operations and flashing the pictures back to headquarters.

Flying 4,000 feet above the city, a United Airlines research plane, equipped with a "vestpocket" telecaster and electronic cameras, soared over Manhattan skyscrapers and waterfront, transmitting pictures of remarkable clarity despite misty conditions. The 45-minute telecast was broadcast over Station W2XBS.

Stationed by television sets at Radio Center, officials and newspapermen had the unique experience of seeing the outside of gigantic buildings as the exeprimental plane skimmed overhead and flashed exterior pictures on the radio screen.

The telecasting equipment, which hitherto required two 10-ton trucks, was cut down to 700 pounds and strapped to work benches on the flying laboratory, a Boeing 247-D transport. The experiment was conducted jointly by Radio Corporation of America, National Broadcasting Co. and United Airlines. Following the demonstration, Lenox R. Lohr, president of N. B. C., declared "it makes a tremendous technical stride. Its social implications are tremendous."

The air-to-land experiment today was a sequel to a flight over Washington last October, when telecast pictures were flashed from the ground to an airliner flying 22,000 feet above the Nation's Capital.

BACKACHE, LEG PAINS MAY BE DANGER SIGN

Of Tired Kidneys

If backache and leg pains are making you miserable, don't just complain and do nothing about them. Nature may be warning you that your kidneys need attention.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills. Adv.

Nichols Says Vote Seekers 'Blow Hot and Cold' In Urging Continuance of Bonded Debt Ban

right to be heard as you are now?" asked Nichols.

Katz admitted that the hearings granted District residents by Congressional committees constituted an exception."

With nine witnesses heard, the subcommittee hearings were speeded up after the chairman insisted that Harry Wender, vice president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, conclude his testimony so that others could be heard.

Sefton Darr, a director of the District Suffrage Association, heads a list of witnesses to be heard today, beginning at 10:30 a. m. in the House Claims Committee room.

Wender concluded his testimony with a plea for a referendum to ascertain how the majority of District residents feel on local suffrage.

ABC System Criticized

"Some very fine people in Washington are against local suffrage and national representation," he said, "but I feel sure that the majority of citizens wants the right to vote."

Criticism of the appointment of nonresidents as counsel for the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board brought immediate commendation from Representative George Bates (Republican), of Massachusetts.

"That seems to me a sound basis for criticism," he said.

A proposal by Katz that District residents be permitted to retain national voting privileges in the States of their origin while voting in local Washington elections brought a comment of surprise from Bates.

Katz said that the Griffenhagen reorganization plan "contains a good working basis as to the democratic form of government which we would like to see established." He suggested a legislative council of 15 persons, elected on a proportional representation basis, which would choose a mayor or city manager.

The C. I. O. spokesmen suggested that the present Commissioners might be made members of an advisory council of six Presidentially appointed members "so that the full benefit of their experience could be obtained and so that they could advise the elected government."

Miss Anthony Testifies

Katz asked for a labor department in the reorganized city government and opposed the plan to leave the schools independent of the administration branch.

Since 1906 there have been 61 appointments to the board, he said, without any selection from the ranks of labor.

Miss Susan B. Anthony, 3d, descendant of the suffragette whose bust stands in the basement of the Capitol, testified for the Washington Youth Council, which, she said, is "unalterably opposed to any reorganization plan that does not include suffrage."

Henry L. Coleman, of the Northwest Citizens Council, started an argument with committee members when he cited the current zoning fight involving the Sears, Roebuck & Co. store plan as an example of an unresponsive municipal government.

"You would have no more guarantees of different treatment under an elective system," remarked Nichols.

Coleman denounced the advisory council proposal of the Commissioners and refused to say whether he preferred appointments by the District heads or the President if Congress refused to grant outright suffrage.

W. J. Tucker, of the Anacostia Citizens Association, in an ardent plea for franchise, compared the plight of District residents to that of convicts on Devil's Island.

"Do you think convicts are ever given a hearing before the French Parliament?" interjected Nichols.

Administrator Urged

A. M. Edwards, of the Citizens Forum of Columbia Heights, said his organization disapproved of the proposed advisory council, favored supplanting the Commissioners with an administrator, and believed that all District jobs should be filled by bona fide residents of three years' standing.

Mrs. Joseph Low, of the Voteless League of Women Voters, said that no reorganization plan not based on suffrage would be satisfactory. She asked for a labor department, an indenependent recreation council, and continuation of the department of weights, measures, and markets.

Mrs. Virginia Stitzenberger, of the League of Women Shoppers, complained that no provision had been made for a consumers' division in the department of weights, measures, and markets and described the activities of such agencies in other cities.

A plea for retention of the Board of Tax Appeals was made by William E. Spicer, of the Washington Institute of Public Accountants. He also urged that Congress retain the power to levy taxes.

chamber was thrown into an uproar as from every side came shouts for recognition. A roll call was demanded, amendments were offered, decisions of the chair were protested; all was confusion—until finally Senator Barkley obtained a recess until today.

When the Senate reconvenes, Danaher's amendment will again come up under a motion to reconsider. Senator Hatch said last night that he expected to oppose the amendment, while Senator Barkley added that the Danaher proposal "would scramble the three departments of the Government."

In his speech just before the vote on the Miller amendment, Senator Barkley revealed that he had been asked by some of his Democratic colleagues not to express his opposition. With rising voice and waving hands, the Majority Leader exclaimed that if he ever had to keep silent in such a case, he would resign from his position.

In answer to a question of Senator Minton, Senator Barkley declared he would be glad to take Senators out of "the patronage business," but he had never seen a "serious effort" in that direction.

which has all classes of licensees as members, "looked like a holding company."

Sartwell, a former newspaper reporter and now public relations counsel, clashed with Representative John F. Hunter (Democrat), of Ohio, when the latter suggested that liquor is being sold to minors.

Hunter said that he had seen deliveries of package liquor on Sundays by boys and had witnessed sales of liquor to minors, some of which he reported to police.

"We were told that more than 200 of the 400 package stores are bootlegging—selling after hours and on Sundays," Hunter said.

Sartwell replied that he did not believe the charge was true and could not answer a statement made at a secret hearing from which he was barred.

The witness said that his organization favors giving the ABC Board broader powers so that it may promulgate regulations without approval by the Commissioners.

He backed up the ABC board on making investigations to ascertain whether any opposition exists in a community before granting a license and asserted that the board should not issue a permit in the face of substantial objections by residents of the area affected.

Attacks Dispensary Plan

"No adequate basis exists for demanding that Congress investigate the desirability of destroying the privately operated liquor stores in the District and substituting for them a Government-operated monopoly in the form of dispensaries," Sartwell said.

His attack was directed at the resolution introduced by Representative Harry R. Sheppard (Democrat), of California.

"On the other hand, there is available factual proof that the system of private sale of such beverages as now conducted is functioning well, that it is operating cleanly, that it is beneficial to the community from the standpoint of taxes, and that it has brought about an improvement in the drinking habits of the community, principally among those described legally as minors," he said.

Sartwell answered criticism of "rookie" police inspectors by saying that "by and large they are doing a conscientious piece of work."

The A. F. L. building trades unions yesterday accepted Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold's offer to discuss the antitrust drive in the building industry, but reiterated that his use of the antitrust laws against labor unions was "erroneous and unjust."

John P. Coyne, head of the building trades department, wrote Arnold that a committee of trade union chiefs was ready to meet him if, in his opinion, a useful purpose might be served." Arnold had suggested the conference.

Extra Force Might Keep Eye on 'British' Other Fire Hazards

sponsible. White House employes extinguished the blaze.

On December 21, 1933, fire broke out in the waste paper room in the basement of the executive offices. A fire detector system started an alarm and White House policemen put out the blaze with an extinguisher.

Buzz Saw in Flames

On August 23, 1934, a gasoline-driven buzz saw in the rear of the executive offices burst into flames. Somebody pulled a signal in the basement, and this automatically caused a triple alarm at fire headquarters, sending trucks and engines from as far north as U street to the White House. By the time the apparatus had arrived, however, the fire was out.

Experts say that while there are a few fire hazards remaining in the White House—some areas of wooden floor and the main open stairway, for example—the situation really is nothing to worry about.

After the British had burned the mansion, it was reconstructed in practically its original form, except that white paint was used thenceforth to cover up the scars of 1814.

The task of fireproofing the White House began in T. R.'s Administration. The old wooden first floor was ripped out and a floor of concrete and steel substituted.

Later on the second floor was partly reconstructed. Not all the wood was removed, but such as remained was covered with incombustible material.

In the Coolidge Administration, the roof and the third floor were made as fireproof as was possible under the circumstances. Servants living on the third floor would be expected to escape by way of the roof if fire broke out.

Since President Franklin D. Roosevelt entered the White House, much has been done in the way of fire prevention work. The new Executive Office, of course, embodies all modern ideas on the subject.

Fire Marshal's Delight

The old electrical fixtures have been removed in the mansion in this same period, and the White House kitchen has been so modernized that it must be a delight to the fire marshal.

Sprinklers have been installed in certain chambers in both the Executive Office and the mansion. Automatic alarms also have been installed. These are set off by high temperature.

Germans Put Captive British On Broadcast

20 Reported Killed, 16 Made Prisoners In West Front Raid

By International News Service

Berlin, March 6.—Germany tonight swiftly capitalized its first real clash with British troops on the Western Front by putting two alleged captured Tommies on the air in a nation-wide radio broadcast.

The men, who spoke in a Cockney accent, identified themselves as Lance Corporal John Walford, of London, and Private Stewart Gray, both members of the Duke of Cornwall Regiment.

Gray, when asked for his impression of the fight, said:

"It all happened too quickly to remember anything."

Walford said he was injured and sent his love to the home folks, as did Gray.

Besides the British prisoners, Lieut. Roth, commander of the Nazi raiding force, took part in the broadcast, giving a detailed account of the fighting in which the Nazis yesterday morning pounced upon two British dugouts.

Attacked at Dawn

Roth placed the scene of the encounter as "southwest of Merzig" and said the British had taken over the sector only two days before the raid.

After Nazi artillery battered the British barbed wire, the Nazis attacked in three groups just as dawn was breaking. Two of the groups carried out a frontal attack, which was met by heavy British fire, while the third—15 men under Sergt. Geise—made its way to the rear of the dugouts.

This group, Roth declared, subdued the English soldiers by hurling hand grenades into the dugouts.

When the survivors came out, they were stammering in confusion, the Nazi lieutenant said. They were told to lie flat on the ground until the other dugout surrendered.

The Nazi high command claimed that 20 British soldiers were killed and 16 captured in the raid.

Ship Raid Comment

Copyright by New York Times

Berlin, March 6.—An official German source commented tonight on the allegations in the foreign press that German planes were sinking neutral ships without ascertaining first whether the vessels were sailing in convoy or being brought into harbor for search as well as reports that German planes were machine gunning lifeboats after sinkings.

Regarding the bombing of neutral ships it is declared that "German planes are not in a position to ascertain whether such vessels are in a convoy which the have accepted voluntarily or whether they are being forcefully conducted to a harbor for search. The plane can only establish the fact that the ships are being accompanied by enemy warships.

"Responsibilty for the fact that neutral vessels being conducted to a harbor must be regarded as being in an enemy convoy and therefore liable to attack" it is asserted, "accrues only to the enemy, which forces the vessels to run into an enemy harbor. In any case, such forced entrance into a harbor is nothing else but the securing of ships for the purpose of confiscating the largest possible portion of their cargo."

Machine Gunning Denied

The German standpoint, therefore, is that vessels being brought up for search are as much liable to attack and destruction, regardless of their nationality, as are vessels which accept an enemy convoy and thereby, in German words, "place themselves in enemy service." The implication of this is plainly that any vessel, regardless of warships on blockade patrol, runs an imminent risk of being bombed and sunk by German planes.

As to the machine gunning of lifeboats after sinking, it is stated, "the British in several cases have been guilty of this brutal form of attack, but it is entirely incompatible with German military honor. The machine gunning of lifeboats without reason by German airplanes never comes into consideration."

Prisoners Put at 750

Geneva, March 6 (AP).—The International Red Cross Prisoners' Bureau said today that its lists showed fewer than 300 Germans, 300 French and 150 British are held prisoners after more than six months of war. Officials said they had "every reason to believe their lists correct up to today.

Caldwell to Try Case of District In Committee

Preparing to start executive hearings on the 1941 District supply bill next Monday, the House Sub-Committee on Appropriations held its first meeting yesterday and complained in private of the tactics of sub-committees of the House District Committee.

Chairman Millard Caldwell (Democrat), of Florida, declined to discuss the meeting, but made clear the sub-committee will conduct its investigations of District institutions without benefit of publicity.

"We will try the District case in the committee room and not in public," he said. "We want to do a good and fair job."

Tour of U. S. Is Abandoned So Woman Can Aid Finland

Miss Elma Ralamb, of Sweden, Will Sail March 22 With Field Hospital Unit Of Which King's Nephew Is Treasurer

Miss Elma Ralamb came over from Sweden last summer to work at her nation's exhibit at the New York World's Fair and then tour the United States. She accomplished the one but as for the sightseeing—well, that must wait to be finished because she's sailing March 22 to help the Finns hold back the Soviets.

"I'm so sorry," said the blonde and pretty Miss Ralamb, "because I have only visited New York, Boston, Chicago and a few other cities, besides Washington, I wanted to go all the way to the West Coast and visit every one of your museums. But Finland now comes first."

A house guest at the Swedish legation since December, Miss Ralamb's interest in American museums stems from the fact that she is intensely interested in the applied arts, such as furniture and interior decoration. At her country's World's Fair pavilion she described Sweden's arts and industries.

Her mother is a Finn and many of her maternal relatives are in uniform against the Red invaders, Miss Ralamb declared. Using the third person, she wrote a statement which says in part:

"She (Miss Ralamb) feels it her duty to go over. Finland needs all help and assistance it can get. But Miss Ralamb thinks that everyone doing any kind of work even over on this side or are giving a sou can count themselves as participants in Finland's fight."

When the Russo-Finnish war began November 30, she immediately dropped her sightseeing plans to begin making bandages and laying plans for more active aid to the defenders. Her chance came with the formation of the American-Scandinavian field hospital unit, which will sail from New York March 22.

The unit, equipped to care for an 80-bed field hospital, comprises 35 surgeons, nurses, technicians and ambulance drivers. Treasurer of the unit committee is Count Folke Bernadotte, nephew of the King of Sweden.

Palestine Land Policy Upheld By Commons

MacDonald Emphasizes Military Importance Of Pacifying Arabs

By the Associated Press

London, March 6.—Prime Minister Chamberlain's government tonight smashed the first motion of censure it has faced in the House of Commons since the war began.

By a vote of 292 to 129, the House upheld the government in its contention that new Palestine land laws impeding Jewish land purchases constitute a wartime necessity to keep disorder from spreading through most of the Arab world.

The majority of 163 against the opposition censure motion was much larger than the 88-vote margin the government obtained on its White Paper last May. The White Paper declared it was not British policy that "Palestine should become a Jewish state."

The land laws, restricting transfer of land from Arabs to Jews, were announced by Colonial Secretary MacDonald February 28. Jews throughout Palestine have staged protests against them, and there have been disturbances in several Holy Land cities in which more than 100 Jews have been reported injured, two fatally and scores of British policemen hurt.

In a debate lasting from mid-afternoon through the evening, the youthful MacDonald, son of the late prime minister, won a long ovation from the government benches for his 80-minute reply to opposition attacks.

"If there were trouble in Palestine," he said, "there would be repercussions in Transjordan, Iraq, Saudi, Aarbia, Egypt and India. One has got to be frank about these things."

Allied Envoys, Hull Discuss Blockade Ills

Special Agents Seek Ways to Diminish Friction With U. S.

By the Associated Press

Two men representing the Franco-British allies went into consultation with Secretary of State Hull yesterday in an attempt to straighten out difficulties arising from the Allied blockade of Germany.

They are Frank Ashton-Gwatkin, adviser to the British ministry for economic warfare, and Charles Rist, formerly deputy governor of the Bank of France. After talking to Hull, they started conferences with other State Department officials. These talks are expected to last some days.

Points of friction which the experts have undertaken to iron out include:

Taking American ships into British contraband control ports within the combat area forbidden to them by the Neutrality Act; delays to American ships at control ports like Gibraltar; censorship of American mails and blockade of German exports to the United States.

The British and French experts arranged also to discuss the British system of navicerfts (navigation certificates whereby British authorities here approve items of cargo bound for Europe, thereby permitting them to go through the Allied patrols).

The experts are also reported prepared to discuss with American officials the project of establishing a control port in Canada to avoid examination of American ships in European waters.

Another item on their program of discussions is that of imposing a rationing system on imports of neutrals adjacent to Germany. The British are said to be uneasy over increased American exports to such neutrals in recent months.

Two fiery and tempestuous personalities, Dana Terraine and Rike Galphine, carry the love interest. Welles to Find French Ready To Press War

Daladier and Lebrun To Receive Envoy Immediately on Arrival

By the Associated Press

Paris, March 6.—The French government's determination to fight Germany to a finish was reaffirmed tonight on the eve of Undersecretary Welles' arrival for fact-finding conferences with French officials.

The French position was set forth in the officially-controlled press. Reports from Lausanne, Switzerland, said Welles was working with the idea that there was hope for peace so long as the western deadlock remained unbroken by mass bloodshed. Colleagues in the Swiss city described him as "still an optimist."

An official announcement said President Roosevelt's personal envoy would be received by Premier Daladier and President Lebrun immediately after his arrival tomorrow and that during his three-day stay he also would confer with officials of the Polish government-in-exile.

Aim Is to Win War

Headlines in the government-controlled newspapers read: "Welcome M. Sumner Welles," but articles beneath them said he would be told by France's statesmen that their immediate aim was to defeat Germany.

Welles saw American and other foreign correspondents in Lausanne this afternoon, but he refrained from commenting on any questions designed to extract what Hitler and other Nazi leaders told him.

From Paris, Welles will go to London, probably Sunday, and then return to Rome before sailing for home about March 18.

Brief Reports to U. S.

Copyright by New York Times

Sumner Welles, Undersecretary of State, is making brief confidential reports of a general nature to President Roosevelt on his European mission, but is understood to be reserving the details for a personal report to the President after his return.

His reports to the State Department, which are said to be reserved for the eyes of Secretary Hull alone, according to such information as is obtainable through the thick cloak of secrecy, merely contain a recital of physical details. They tell of his reception in the various capitals, what officials he has interviewed, the press conferences he has held, and other facts that appear in press reports.

It is reported that a private code has been devised for his communications to the President, consisting sometimes of a single word that gives the clew as to the general trend of his discussions in each capital he visits.

Queen Elizabeth Nears New York

plished in about the time usually taken by the Queen Mary—about four and a half days.

London shipping sources said New York was one of the safest of the few big berths able to handle the Queen Elizabeth.

The traffic for which she was built—luxury transatlantic service—is virtually nonexistent due to the war and United States neutrality laws, which prohibit Americans from traveling direct to belligerent ports.

When traveling down the Clyde February 26, the drab gray liner, aided by eight tugs, took nearly an hour to negotiate the difficult Rashielee bend, where the Queen Mary touched the bank on a similar trip.

The Queen Elizabeth's bow, caught by an incoming tide, swung toward the south bank, but the tugs pulled the big ship back into midstream. Her launching was one of the greatest feats in marine engineering, as she was 160 feet longer than the Clyde River was wide.

The Elizabeth is 1,030 feet long, 10 more than the Queen Mary, can accommodate 2,400 passengers, to the Mary's 2,000, and has 14 decks, two more than the Mary.

Thousands Kept Secret

London (Thursday), March 7 (AP).—Announcement of the Queen Elizabeth's Atlantic crossing was hailed throughout Great Britain today as striking proof of the royal navy's command of the seas and a remarkable tribute to the Englishman's ability to keep an important secret.

"Thousands of Clydeside people knew the Elizabeth had left her berth nine days ago and the Scottish and National press of Great Britain knew it," said the authoritative British Press Association, "and yet the secret was kept.

"The lives of the crew of the great ship were at stake, not to mention the pride of the British navy itself. Clydesiders . . . remembered Britain's guardian motto, 'careless talk costs lives.'"

"Had any evilly disposed central European personage wished to interfere with the proceedings he had due notice," declared the Daily Herald.

On June 20, 1939, it was announced officially that February 26, 1940, would be the day for moving the Queen Elizabeth. She kept to schedule."

Cannes, France, March 6.—Maxine Elliott, 67, stage star of two continents, who became a leader of international society, died last night at her Riviera Chateau.

Messages of condolence came tonight to the Juan Les Pins Chateau from royalty, statesmen and commoners who had been her guests. Her sister, Lady Forbes-Robertson, was en route from England to make funeral arrangements.

Miss Elliott retired from the stage in 1920 to become one of European society's outstanding hostesses, entertaining such guests as the Duke of Windsor, who echoed the admiration of his grandfather, Edward VII, Winston Churchill and David Lloyd George.

All attempts to induce the famous beauty of the early part of the century to return to the stage were futile, Miss Elliott asserting that she wished to "grow middle aged gracefully." She never remarried after divorcing Nat Goodwin, noted actor, in 1908.

Miss Elliott was one of the first American women to volunteer for Red Cross work at the outbreak of the World War, but a heart ailment from which she had suffered since last June kept her from active war work in the present conflict.

British Seizures Answer Protest

cision to seize German exports was not directed against Italy.

German exports en route to 19 countries have now been seized since the enemy exports order went into effect. Every one of these countries has asked for certain classes of exports to be exempted and certain exemptions have been made, but in more than half of these cases applications for exemption were refused. It is argued here that the entire blockade system would break down if the British showed favoritism to the Italians.

U. S. Shipments Taken

Among other German exports seized, some of which were going to the United States, were beer and hops, woolen thread, cloth, textile and other machinery, photographic apparatus, iron plates, iron bars and barbed wire.

The same sources disclosed that applications for "navicerts," documents which pass cargoes or sections of cargoes through the blockade prior to sailing, now averaged 500 a week in the Americas, for a total of 30,000 since the system was instituted. During February, the ministry said, 71 ships from the Americas sailed for Europe with these certificates.

Nine United States ships were examined in British contraband control ports between February 24 and March 2. (Presumably most of these were detained at Gibraltar.)

Forced examination of United States transatlantic air mails at Bermuda was upheld in the House of Commons by Foreign Affairs Undersecretary R. A. Butler. This action, he said, "was correct and moreover was justified by what was discovered in the mail."

"Information has now come to hand to show that Premier Mussolini was personally responsible for the decision to suspend the trade talks with the British and refuse to trade Italian airplane engines, tanks and guns for British coal.

Italian trade experts had agreed to include these products, and the list was checked and approved by Foreign Minister Count Ciano, but when the full agreement was sent to Chigi Palace for approval, Premier Mussolini cut off not only airplane engines but all war materials.

The British officials were called in the next day and told that Italy would take British coal in place of German coal only if Britain, like Germany, prepared to accept Italian agricultural produce in payment. This was rejected by the British.

The moderate tone of the Italian press in the last few days has encouraged British officials to believe that some compromise may be reached. The British Ambassador, Sir Percy Loraine, is said to be trying to convince the Italians they should make use of British export credits to purchase coal here since they have not the necessary sterling to buy here the 6,000,000 tons they usually get by sea from Germany.

Fascists Are Cautious

Rome, March 6 (AP).—Fascist officials took a cautious stand in the British-Italian dispute over German coal today as tension continued to run high with at least one incipient attempt at an anti-British demonstration.

Police reinforcements guarded the British embassy in Rome after an abortive attempt at demonstrations yesterday before the British consulate in Florence.

Fascist officials, however, cautioned questioners against any exaggeration of the crisis in what the newspapers are calling "the coal war." They expressed a tendency to await clarification of "the confusion in the situation."

Italian authorities indicated they were awaiting not only the British reply to their protest against the coal blockade but also reports on the circumstances in which the detained ships sailed from Rotterdam.

Isthmus Lines Hold

The Isthmus situation is not considered so critical now as it was a few days ago although the Russians, after their penetration near Summa, advanced nearly 15 miles. The new Finnish positions, which from a point north of Viipuri run eastward to the Vuoksi waterway, are said to be strong. When the ice melts these positions will become still more easy to defend. The same is said to apply to the positions nort hof Viipuri.

The Russians bombed four hospitals yesterday, killing 35 persons, many of them patients. One hospital burned down and the three others were destroyed. All were marked with the Red Cross.

Helsinki Angry at Delay

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, March 6.—"Exasperation" is the term used in news dispatches reaching London from Helsinki, to express the feeling of the Finns at the failure of "their friends" abroad to forward the military assistance which it is said, was promised earlier.

Meanwhile, the report is spreading in informed quarters in London that unless assistance is dispatched on a scale far beyond that in immediate prospect, the Finnish defense must inevitably weaken, and there are renewed reports of efforts in other than Allied quarters to mediate between Moscow and Helsinki.

Just as an end of the war in the north would leave the Soviets free to look to their interests elsewhere, so such a development would tend to preoccupy the Allies elsewhere.

Though there is doubt in informed quarters here as to whether Moscow, after the Finnish experience, would enter on ventures elsewhere, there is little doubt but that a U. S. S. R. freed from concern in the north, would appear as a potential menace to certain states and territories in southwestern Europe and the near and middle east.

Thus it is asked if the simple possibility of an armistice in the north may not stimulate the Allies to speedy action in either direct or indirect defense of Finland.

It is not to be ruled out of course, that the Allies have been preparing all along some steps, on a substantial scale of a type which would serve to bolster the Finnish defense. Such plans, if they exist, may not have been disclosed even to the Finnish authorities. Surprise is an essential element in war time.

Norse Assent Essential

Presumably the Allied operation, if it is to come, must be carried out through the Scandinavian countries as a means of access to Finland, in the Arctic or in the Middle East. The refusal of Norway and Sweden to permit the Allies to use their respective territories as a thoroughfare for troops has been adequately publicized and if the authorities here are to be believed Scandinavian neutrality would not be violated by the Allies—without permission.

Nazis Expand Flights to Night Raid on Britain

Ship Off Scotland Bombed; Big Tanker Reported Sunk

By the Associated Press

London ((Thursday) March 7.—German air attacks on British coastal shipping apparently ended a new 'round-the-clock phase today with the first night bombings off English and Scottish coasts.

Two German planes bombed and machine-guned the 695-ton British tanker Shelbrit II off the northeast coast of Scotland last night. Two of the crew were injured.

Radio listeners heard a British lightship off the Norfolk coast broadcast an S O S saying she was being bombed and sprayed with machine-gun fire.

Tanker Reported Sunk

At the time of the broadcast three bombs had been dropped but none hit the ship.

The attacks suggested the Germans were expanding their air warfare with the improved spring weather.

In a delayed report from Amsterdam, the newspaper Shipping was quoted as saying the San Florentino, 12,842 tons, had been torpedoed off Lands End Tuesday. The San Florentino, one of the world's largest oil tankers, left Galveston, Tex., January 25 for Havre.

Norse to Shoot Red Planes

Oslo, Norway, March 6 (AP).—Air defense units in northern Norway were ordered today to shoot if Soviet planes again cross the border.

Norwegian authorities said Russian planes have been flying over Norway so frequently that it appeared the flights were not accidental.

Paris Guards Against Raids

Paris, March 6 (INS).—Searchlights swept the skies above Paris tonight in defense against possible Nazi raiders, but no air raid alarm had been sounded up to 9 p. m. (4 p. m. E. S. T.).

Meanwhile, French evening war ministry communique stated, "Nothing of importance to report," indicating a lull in the activity of recent days.

Reports received from abroad state that the warring nations have had to hurriedly equip bombers with armor because pursuit planes have found them easy prey, officials declared. Special light steel alloys are used to protect vital parts, it was said.

Maas Urges New Agency

In another defense development, Representative Maas, of Minnesota, ranking minority member of the House Naval Committee, proposed the creation of a national commission on inventions.

Maas, a colonel of Marine Reserves, said the Nation was losing vital new weapons, because of "cursory" treatment of inventors by the War and Navy Departments. He questioned Rear Admiral William R. Furlong, chief of the bureau of ordnance, in the matter, at a hearing of the special House reorganization subcommittee.

"I know of no inventions we have lost," answered Furlong.

"How about the Lewis machine gun," returned Maas. "The Army wouldn't pay any attention to it until England had adpoted the gun, and then had to buy British patent rights."

Maas suggested a commission of civilians and military leaders which would consider inventions and turn over those having merit to the applicable Government agency for development.

Mrs. Mabry, 72, Dies in Arlington

Mrs. Frances M. Mabry, 72, died at her home, 5703 North Sixth street, Arlington, Va. She was the widow of W. D. Mabry, Civil War veteran.

Mrs. Mabry was born in Boone, Iowa, and lived in Arlington 26 years, where she was an organizer of the Clarendon unit of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, which she served as president two years. Five years ago she retired from the General Accounting Office after 43 years.

Funeral services will be conducted Saturday by the Rev. Perry L. Mitchell, pastor of Clarendon Baptist Church, at 10 a. m., at C. J. Ives' funeral chapel, Clarendon. Burial will be in Arlington National Cemetery.

Surviving are a daughter, Mrs. Clare R. Tisdale, and a son, Clarence B. Mabry, both of Arlington.

Russia Reported Offering Finns Peace Terms

tesque position of fighting those who brought help to the Finns.

The only way out of this dilemma for Sweden was to put an end to the Finnish war, and there is reason to believe that the Swedes have made strenuous efforts to this end. It is reported that Fuehrer Hitler said this week he was completely indifferent to the fate of Finland. It is understood here that Stalin was not keen for Germany to mediate, but agreed to the Swedes doing so.

Peace Might Aid Nazis

If mediation should result in terms which placed Finland under Russian control, it would weaken the position of the whole of Scandinavia, in the opinion of Allied observers here, and would insure Russian and German domination of the entire Baltic region. Germany would be assured of getting Swedish iron, while the cessation of fighting in Finland would enable Russia to send more supplies to Germany.

Opinions differ as to how long the Finns can hold out without manpower from abroad. Some point to their strong defenses, while others emphasize the lack of reserves to relieved tired troops. It is said here that if the Swedes sent their northern army to Finland it would take several weeks, and that for British troops to get there would take a month or so. Hence many felt that unless Allied troops arrived soon the Finns would be under an increasing and perhaps an impossible strain.

The Swedes point to the help they have already given. They say that early in the war they sent to Finland half their army's antiaircraft guns, half its anti-tank guns and half its ammunition, and that this enabled the Finns to fight as long as they have.

It also weakened Sweden's defenses and thus made her more susceptible to threats from Germany. The Swedes feel they have done their bit and insist that they cannot be expected to risk incurring the enmity of Germany, either by sending their own army to Finland or by permitting the passage of large Allied forces.

Suspicious of British

The opinion is widespread in Sweden that the Allies have a desire to drag Scandinavia into the war and establish a Northern Front against Germany. It is believed here that the British are less interested in saving Finland than in blocking Germany's access to Swedish iron, and perhaps threatening Germany and Russia from the Baltic Sea region at the same time.

"Even if Germany invaded half of Sweden the British would not mind, if they could interpose a barrier between Germany and Swedish iron," said one Swedish observer today.

(Winston Churchill, British First Lord of the Admiralty, told the House of Commons today that the admiralty had not tried to halt shipments of Swedish iron ore to Germany—yet.)

Germany now receives Swedish iron at the rate of some 10,000,000 tons a year, while Britain receives about 2,000,000 tons under the new trade agreements made by the Swedes with Berlin and London.

Swedish sources say Sweden tried several times—the last time in 1937—to equalize iron exports as between Germany and Britain so that in case of war she could decrease them impartially. But the British were not interested.

Meanwhile, long before the war the Germans carefully explored the Norwegian coast and found a way to bring iron from Narvik to Germany without going outside territorial waters. The British admiralty was surprised by this feat, it is said here, and the Altmark incident was the result.

Since the British seized the Altmark the Germans have feared they would seize their iron ships also. The Germans have cut down their cargoes of iron. In February they imported from Sweden only 98,000 tons instead of the normal 700,000 tons, it is said here.

After the middle of May Germany can get iron through the Gulf of Bothnia. Hence the Swedes say the British cannot completely cut of iron shipments unless they can close the Baltic to German traffic.

Moreover, the Swedes argue that their iron is not vital to Germany, that Germany could carry on a long war without it, and that Britain exaggerates its importance.

The Swedes are haunted by the apprehension that their iron might make Sweden a major battlefield.

impossible for her to supply an equal amount to Britain.

Output Too Small

These experts calculated Rumania's output as less than 4,000,000 tons of oil this year. If both German and Britain claims were met, only 800,000 tons would remain, not enough to maintain Rumanian trade with the Balkans, Italy and other countries based on the exchange of Rumanian oil for other products.

It also was reported that German pressure for Rumanian products had increased to the point that the Nazis had demanded the entire Rumanian 1940 wool crop. The native yarn industry would be ruined if this German demand were met.

Mine Body Says Ickes' 'Amazing' Report Breaks Confidences

By Felix Cotten,
Post Staff Writer

Secretary of the Interior Ickes yesterday made public a report on the Bartley, West Virginia, mine explosion in January in which 91 men lost their lives, and was immediately accused by the American Mining Congress of releasing for propaganda purposes information given Government engineers in confidence.

The engineers concluded that the explosion probably was caused by sparks from defective electrical equipment. One of the dead miners, however, was found to have two cigarettes in his jacket, although the men were searched for smoking materials before going into the mine.

Interior Department officials said that, in making the report public, Ickes had reversed a practice followed by the Bureau of Mines before Dr. John W. Finch was ousted as its director. Ickes' differences with Finch reportedly centered around the Neely bill for Federal inspection of coal mines.

The Interior Department said Ickes made public the report following "a new opinion" by Nathan R. Margold, department solicitor, that he had authority to do so. The American Mining Congress declared Ickes apparently had caused Margold to reverse an opinion made two years ago and was understood to have had the approval of the Attorney General.

Report Called "Amazing"

Margold explained that, after further research, he had decided the previous opinion was wrong. It covered five points, he declared. The Attorney General, he said, approved four of the points, but did not pass on the question of publication of reports on mine disasters.

In one of the points approved by the Attorney General, he declared, he held that the Federal Government had no authority to inspect coal mines. The Neely mine inspection bill, he said, was an outgrowth of this ruling.

The mining congress characterized publication of the report as "amazing," since it revealed information "which was both given and taken in strictest confidence."

It was apparent, however, the organization said, that Ickes "did not mean only to report on this investigation, but to cloak under its cover definite propaganda aimed at prying the proposed Federal mine inspection bill loose from the hands of the House Mines and Mining Committee."

"Flair for Dramatics"

"With his usual flair for timing and dramatics," the congress declared, Ickes released the report just before the House committee planned to meet on the bill and the West Virginia department of mines had arranged for a hearing on the explosion.

"It has been repeatedly stated," the congress said, "that Ickes desires the passage of this bill in order that he might use it as a club upon coal operators in enforcing the Guffey coal act."

Ickes compelled publication of the report, the organization declared, "at the insistence of C. I. O. representatives." The Bureau of Mines recently refused to furnish the United Mine Workers (C. I. O.) with a copy of the report. The union is supporting the Neely bill.

The Interior report commends the management of the Bartley mine for installing electrical equipment classed as safe, but said it became lax in the matter of upkeep. It was because of the condition of the equipment, the engineers said, that they concluded an electric spark had ignited methane gas in the mine.

Jackson Supports Law to Permit Suits Against U. S.

By the Associated Press

Attorney General Jackson gave his support yesterday to legislation which would permit citizens to sue the Federal Government for certain types of damages when their claims do not exceed $7,500.

In a letter to a Senate Judiciary subcommittee, Jackson said "the continued immunity of the Government to suit on common law torts does not seem to be warranted either as a matter of principle or as a matter of justice."

Charles Ruzicka, of Baltimore, urged enactment of the legislation on behalf of the American Bar Association. He told the committee it would not only relieve Congress of a heavy burden but would eliminate a situation in which many persons "having honest and legitimate claims against the Government are often left remediless because of their inability to have their cases adequately presented before overburdened Congressional committees."

House Cracking, Sinking From Sewer Blasting

Allen Latimer points to cracks (arrows) which have appeared in the stone walls of house at 2200 Q street northwest since blasting started on the Rock Creek diversion sewer. Marvin Woolf (top right), peers down into the 20-foot hole which once was a section of the lawn. Left—Exterior of the "sinking house" near Embassy Row

Seventeen persons were seeking new homes last night as refugees from a sinking house at 2200 Q street northwest near the heart of Embassy Row.

The victims are H. W. Campbell, proprietor of a tourist home at the Q street address, his wife and son, Dick, Western High School student, and 14 roomers.

They were ordered to evacuate on 24 hours notice by the office of District Building Inspector Col. John W. Oehmann because the building has been sinking slowly but steadily, into ground disrupted by blasting and tunnelling operations for a portion of the city's $3,500,000 Rock Creek diversion sewer project.

Evacuation was ordered, according to Ellwood Johnson, the District's resident engineer on the project, "purely as a precautionary measure," after a portion of Campbell's front lawn had dropped from sight and after cracks more than an inch wide and as much as 4 feet long had appeared in walls of the house.

Johnson said that there was little likelihood of the house disappearing entirely or falling apart, but that District officials did not "want to be responsible for human lives."

Four Other Homes Involved

City officials have yet to decide whether four other homes connected with the Campbell house in a row from 1534 to 1528 Twenty-second street northwest are to develop conditions warranting evacuation of their inhabitants.

If these homes should duplicate the performance of the Campbell home, an evacuation order would bring to nearly 60 the number of refugees.

Tenants in other units of the row building include Mrs. Bessie I. Bailey, 1534 Twenty-second street, who has ten roomers, and Mrs. Delphia Koch, 1530-32 Twenty-second street, 30 roomers. The resident at 1528 Twenty-second street, at the end of the row near the Church of the Pilgrims, is Rear Admiral Alexander Van Keuren, chief of the United States Navy Bureau of Construction and Repair.

Within a block of the sinking house are the Turkish and Rumanian legations.

House Fenced Off

The Campbell home, at Twenty-second and Q streets, has been fenced off from the street by the District. Persons wishing to enter the house from the front have to crawl through the fence, which, officials explained, is to keep passers-by far enough away to escape being hit by falling materials.

Blasting in the sewer tunnel, running 50 feet below Twenty-second street from a short distance south of P street to Q street, was ordered stopped last Friday, Johnson disclosed.

He said investigators for the District engineering department and the contractors, the Joseph Lombardi Co., had been unable to determine the cause of the sinking. They were particularly mystified, he said, by the disappearance of a 3-foot section of Campbell's lawn.

The section slid from sight Tuesday morning, leaving a hole about 20 feet deep which since has been partly filled with a truckload of earth.

Officials pointed out that the land on which the row of houses stands is filled ground. A Civil War prison camp was located in the neighborhood, which formerly was crossed by a deep ravine and small creek into which camp refuse was dumped.

To cover the refuse, the ravine was filled with earth dug from the vicinity of R street northwest, but whether the house is sinking into this old fill or a later one close by, could not be determined.

Ground Was Tested

Test borings made before sewer construction was begun gave no indication of possible earth settlement, Johnson said.

Campbell said he would not be surprised if his house would one day slide out into Twenty-second street. He suggested an underground stream might be the cause of the settlement, but engineers said they had been unable to find subterranean water in any "alarming amount."

Campbell received his 24-hour evacution notice Tuesday. He stayed in the house that night, but Mrs. Campbell and their son slept in homes nearby. Accommodations also had to be found for the 14 roomers, at Campbell's expense.

A half-inch crack running the length of the entrance separates living room from the hall. Ceiling and walls of the living room are cracked and at one point the sinking appears to have separated joists.

Window sashes have been pulled askew as much as 4 inches and none of the living room windows can be moved. A 4-foot crack a half-inch wide appeared yesterday in the coal bin.

Walls Falling Out

Engineers explained that the east and west walls of the house are falling outward from the top and that the pressure is crushing floors inside.

Campbell last night was hunting a house into which he could permanently move his family and where he could resume his ten-year-old tourist home business. None of the furniture—there are 12 rooms in the house—had been moved.

Work of advancing the sewer tunnel will be resumed only after the cause of the sinking has been determined and houses have been made safe, Johnson said.

Since operations on the sewer were begun last fall, the District has received nearly 100 complaints of cracked plaster and other damage ascribed to blasting. In each case, Johnson said, inspections have been made and thus far the Campbell home has been the only one found seriously affected.

Homes along the line of the sewer, projected to run from Piney Branch to the river, have been photographed by the District to show their condition before construction was started. This was done, Johnson explained, to protect homeowners. The District, he said, is covered by contractor's bond from liability for damage claims.

New Hospital Open Today 'For Business'

Doctors Institution Inspected by 6,000 At Gala Reception

Doctors Hospital will be "open for business" this morning, following a gala reception of inspection yesterday attended by more than 6,000 persons.

Charles E. Vadakin, administrator, last night declared that about 15 patients will launch the institution on its career this morning, exclusive of whatever emergency cases may be admitted during the day. Official opening time is 7:30 a. m.

The first surgical operations—again barring emergencies—will be performed at 8 a. m. tomorrow, said Vadakin. The hospital is approximately 95 per cent equipped, with the job scheduled to be completed in a few days.

Members of the hospital's executive committee and board of directors received visitors at yesterday's open house, assisted by Drs. William J. Mallory, R. K. Thompson, W. Marion Falls and J. Walter Bernhard; Theodore Wiprud, secretary of the District Medical Society, and Administrator Vadakin.

Tour parties, led by graduate nurses, started in the hospital's eleventh-floor solarium and worked down to the basement, viewing operating suites, private rooms, diet kitchens, laboratories and all other portions of the $1,600,000 plant at 1815 I street northwest.

Burial Tomorrow For Mrs. Zafra

Funeral services for Mrs. Marie Frances Zafra, 25, wife of Urbano A. Zafra, manager of the Washington office of the Philippine Sugar Association, will be at 9:30 a. m. tomorrow at the Hines funeral home. Requiem mass will be offered at 10 a. m. at St. Ann's Catholic Church, 4400 Wisconsin avenue northwest, with burial in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Mrs. Zafra, who died Tuesday, was a native of Washington. Besides her husband, she leaves a son, Victor, 3; her mother, Mrs. Mary Russell, and a brother, Stephen Russell, all of Washington.

Police Acquit Sergt. Guy Rone

Acquitted by the Police Trial Board of taking 75 cents belonging to Flora Swann, colored, of 1320 U street northwest, Detective Sergt. Guy Rone will face the board again today on a charge of misconduct.

The Swann woman and Thomas Gordon, colored, also of the U street address, accused Rone of entering their apartment December 6, using "vile and profane" language, striking Gordon and "moving as if to strike" the woman. Rone said he went to the apartment seeking a fugitive and denied any misconduct and all knowledge of the money.

Also today Private James L. Mavars, of Eleventh Precinct, will face the board on a charge of intoxication while on duty.

He Still Lives

The ninetieth birthday anniversary of the late President Thomas Garrigue Masaryk of Czecho-Slovakia comes at a singularly tragic moment in the history of his nation and people.

It was during Dr. Masaryk's lifetime, and to no small extent because of his labors, that the Czecho-Slovaks achieved their independence. It was under his benign guidance that the republic which they established became, during the 20 years following the armistice, one of the most enlightened and progressive nations in Europe.

Now, four years after the Liberator's death, Czechs and Slovaks are again living under an alien yoke far more rigorous than any they have previously experienced. But they have not forgotten Masaryk. The work he did lives on, if no longer in institutions certainly in the minds and hearts of men. His name is more than ever a Czecho-Slovak rallying point, a symbol of aspirations which were fulfilled once and may be fulfilled again.

Every nation can be judged by its heroes. It is to the eternal glory of the Czecho-Slovaks that the greatest of their modern heroes was a man of the stature of Masaryk—teacher, philosopher, humanitarian—an individual who embodied the best of that European civilization which the ruthless dictators of today are seeking to destroy.

On The Other Foot

Until now Italy has been about the only European nation to benefit from the war.

She has been one of the very few neutrals that has not had before her the ever-present possibility of a lightning invasion by a powerful aggressor. Germany's U-boat and mine warfare has affected Italian shipping only slightly, whereas the Netherlands, to cite but one instance, has already experienced depredations relatively greater than those suffered by Great Britain or France. And Italy has been in a more favorable position than other neighbors of Germany to act in the profitable capacity of middleman between that nation and the outside world.

Unhappily for Italy, the favorable position she has enjoyed has been due primarily to Allied willingness to let her profit by her situation. For various reasons, the British and French have treated Italy with a tenderness and solicitude shown no other neutral. They are no longer prepared to do so, for, as the British seizure of Italian freighters loaded with German coal clearly demonstrates, Great Britain and France are now determined to plug up every loophole in the blockade, no matter whose toes are trampled in the process.

This action has placed Mussolini on the horns of a dilemma. He cannot permit the British to continue interfering with Italian commerce without losing prestige and prestige is for Mussolini, as for all dictators, the most precious of intangibles. On the other hand, it would be anything but the counsel of wisdom to resist Great Britain by force.

As an ally of Germany, Italy could, undoubtedly, deal severe blows. Italy's submarine fleet and air force, supplemented with those of the Reich, could do great damage to Great Britain and France. Yet Italy's entrance into the war would automatically make that country the major battlefield.

It must not be forgotten that during the first six months of the war, even while the Allies were treating Italy with kid gloves, they were also preparing for a possible showdown with Mussolini.

During that period they succeeded in winning over Turkey as an ally, assembled a sizable military force in the Near East, speeded up their naval construction, strengthened their air force and perfected measures to meet the menace of submarine and mine warfare.

Apparently Great Britain and France now feel strong enough to make it clear to the Duce that he is not the free agent he thought. They have begun to bring it home to him, as they have brought it home to the smaller neutrals, that neutrality is no longer the profitable state it was for some nations in the last war. In squeezing Italy they are, to be sure, taking the chance of alienating that country. It is hardly open to question that they did not consider this possibility in advance. But they appear determined to go ahead with their plans anyway.

In the past, Great Britain and France gave way to Italy because Italy demonstrated a readiness to use force. The shoe today is on the other foot. It is the Allies which are prepared to use force. And Mussolini knows it.

Memorial To Jefferson?

The report of Gallinger Hospital staff doctors on conditions at Blue Plains is nothing less than a bombshell. Now that these horrible details have come to light, Mrs. Roosevelt's account seems understatement. Washington must face the ugly truth that this institution is not really a Home for the Aged and Infirm, but a replica of London's notorious Fleet Prison as it was a century ago.

"In our medical survey of the 691 inmates of the Home for Aged and Infirm," the investigating physicians state, "we found conditions more closely approaching those described in the writing of Charles Dickens than the standards which should be applied to such a home in the Nation's Capital in the year 1940." That sharp comment is not as shocking, however, as the matter-of-fact details revealed by investigators. Those who examine the results of the survey will not need to be told that this great democratic Capital is treating a group of unfortunates with almost medieval cruelty.

The home is a dumping ground for human derelicts of virtually all types. Although primarily intended to serve as a refuge for indigent and homeless aged, Blue Plains has also opened its doors to feeble-minded, epileptic, insane, deaf-mute, blind and incurable patients of all ages. Some of the inmates were sent there to convalesce from serious illnesses and then forgotten. Others are prisoners released from jails and reformatories who cannot find work, and still others are healthy men in their fifties who lack only jobs to make them self-supporting.

No attempt has been made to segregate this motley assemblage of unfortunates, except as to sex and color. Twenty-one feeble-minded inmates, seven "potentially dangerous" psychotics and eight epileptics share the meager facilities of the home with aged men and women and various young people who are struggling to get back on their feet after some misfortune.

Most of the feeble-minded inmates are "very untidy" and subject themselves to few restraints. "Some are subject to fits of rage." One epileptic is reported to wander "around the ward and to the dining room in a semi-stupor" for a day or two after an attack. The doctors estimate that 200 have had syphilis, and, while no active cases were found, many are in need of treatment that is available to only a few.

Mingling with these pitiful cases are a young woman victim of infantile paralysis, a 25-year-old deaf-mute and several persons in their thirties who need only artificial limbs to alleviate their disabilities. More than 150 cases of total or partial blindness were found, many of them lacking sight only for want of surgical attention. Over 120 inmates are bedridden in the infirmary.

To alleviate this aggregate burden of woe and suffering, the home has one part-time doctor, one graduate nurse and some cast-away Army medical equipment.

Althogether it is a pitiful picture that the investigating doctors have drawn. But pity is not likely to be the strongest emotion that their report will arouse. Far more pointed will be the feeling of resentment that human beings can be accorded such inhuman treatment in the Nation's Capital while millions are being spent for municipal adornment. Over a period of many years an institution that should be a model for the country has been outrageously neglected.

It is difficult to believe that the Commissioners had any detailed knowledge of these conditions. Certainly Congress as a body did not. Yet these are the agencies on which the people of Washington must rely for the control of affairs intimately affecting the lives of the people. The doctors' findings at Blue Plains are not so much an indictment of any individual as they are a blot upon our irresponsible system of local government.

For several years the community has pressed its appeal for home rule on grounds of simple justice. Now it faces the necessity of demanding reforms that will eliminate a national disgrace.

No Objection Left

The President has given timely support to the supplementary Hatch bill, now under debate in the Senate. In signing Senator Hatch's original measure to curb "pernicious" political activities, Mr. Roosevelt manifested a certain lack of enthusiasm. With that law on the books, however, he observes that logic demands an extension of its restrictions.

By taking this reasonable stand the President has cut the ground from under Senator Minton and others who are trying to defeat the current Hatch bill and emasculate the act already in effect. He has left them without a single valid argument. The desirability of curbing partisan activities on the part of civil service employes is established beyond question. That safeguard is the essence of any genuine merit system. It follows that there is no convincing objection to the extension of this sound principle to other nonpolicy-making Government employes.

Mr. Hatch introduced the current bill in order to eliminate an unwarranted discrimination between Federal employes and other public servants paid wholly or in part from Federal funds. Certainly this encouragement of impartial public service would be desirable in the case of the District of Columbia. It would be no less constructive in the case of State employes whose jobs depend upon financial aid from Congress. There is no infringement of individual rights. Persons who prefer active party leadership to the public service are free to make their choice. The mere fact that public jobs are made contingent upon avoidance of partisan activity has nothing whatever to do with personal liberty.

Nor can it be said that the contemplated restrictions upon the spending of Federal funds by the States would constitute any invasion of their rights. The States are entirely free to let their highway employes play politics so long as they are spending State money. When they accept conditional gifts from Congress they must abide by the requirements of the Federal law. Congress not only has a right to impose restrictions of this sort; it has also a positive responsibility to see that the money it appropriates is not used to entrench local political machines.

Congress can render the States a genuine service by enacting the new Hatch bill. Enforcement of that measure would quickly bring home to the local Legislatures the importance of strengthening their merit systems. They would be put on notice that Federal money is not available to feather the nests of local politicians. With active partisanship thus outlawed for many State employes, there would be increasing pressure to make that safeguard general, in line with President Roosevelt's good advice.

Communist Technique

A deliberately belligerent attitude was assumed by a New York Negro Communist, one Benjamin Davis, in testifying Tuesday at a Senate committee hearing on the pending antilynching bill. His attitude was well expressed in his opening observation that: "It is the plain duty of the Senate Judiciary Committee to put an end to the reactionary efforts being made to emasculate and stifle this bill."

So offensive were some of the remarks of this witness as to sting Senator Van Nuys into saying that Davis was doing more to prevent passage of the bill than any who have appeared to criticize its shortcomings. The irritation of the Senator was understandable. He has been accused in the so-called news columns of the Daily Worker, a New York Communist paper which employs Davis, as "actually sabotaging" the legislation in question, "although nominally one of the sponsors."

The episode is an interesting illustration of the habitual Communist technique, carefully worked out in Moscow and religiously followed by the devotees of the party in this and other countries where they are allowed freedom of action.

The Communist Party as such has no more interest in the fate of American Negroes than it has in the future of the Finnish workers now being assiduously bombed in their homes by Soviet airplanes. In all probability the party leaders would like to see the present antilynching bill defeated. The testimony of Davis, with its references to the "Democratic reactionaries and Republican hypocrites" in Congress, was certainly calculated to secure this end.

But the undermining of the measure is, up to a point, skillfully handled. There is no attempt to analyze or refute the many valid objections to the proposed legislation or the many reasons for believing that it would cause more rather than less racial difficulty. On the contrary the Communists, with the abysmal lack of humor which is their greatest weakness, advocate it as a stimulus for democracy, as a proposal "in complete accord with the traditions of Lincoln and Jefferson."

It is at this point that the subtleties of the comrades become threadbare. It is easy to see why they should secretly desire a Senate defeat of the antilynching bill. With the unthinking, that outcome would tend to strengthen the Communist Party claim to be "the uncompromising and outstanding fighter for the complete liberation of the Negro people." But when the Reds strike attitudes as advocates of democracy and the liberation of the oppressed, as indorsers of the American liberal tradition, then it is clear where hypocrisy really lies.

"How To Die Young"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: An attache of one of the embassies in Washington has called my attention to a newspaper picture entitled "Team Wrestling in Texas, or How to Die Young." The cutlines read: "Two-man team wrestling is sweeping through Texas. Here Babe Zaharias holds Kal Davis, while Chris Zaharias, Babe's brother and partner, sails through the air to plant his No. 12 brogans squarely in the midriff of the unfortunate Davis, whose partner had already been rendered hors de combat."

If this represents the American idea of sport then we are a decadent Nation indeed! For a man to hold his antagonist in order that he may be stamped upon by another man, perhaps injured for life, is the most abominable and barbaric cruelty. Crowds applaud. The picture of the atrocity is broadcast far and wide for young boys to see, and to add to the outrage, the title is supposed to be funny! "Or How to Die Young!" Surely we have sunk to depths of degradation.

Would that someone with more power than I possess might be impelled to put an end to such examples of debauched and betrayed sport!

If I, being only a woman, may be accused of sentimentality, of not understanding the rules of this delightful and fascinating pastime, what will the "hard-boiled" reply when a man exclaims with horror, "It is atrocious! It is frightful! It is a black disgrace to America!"

President's Trip

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Now that the President has returned, I should like to ask why all the secrecy was necessary in connection with his trip? One would think the U. S. was at war with all this publicity about an undisclosed port of departure, secret destination, etc. Or was it just a publicity stunt in an election year? I guess the latter.

McKinley High

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I believe that something should be done about the reputation of McKinley High School. Through numerous articles, people have acquired the opinion that anyone attending McKinley is either a "technical" student or he doesn't count. I should like very much to have this opinion changed. The fault is partly yours and several other Washington newspapers. As an example, I refer to your recent edition of pictures on high schools.

In the first place, you selected Billy Fritts, with whom I am acquainted. You showed all the technical courses he takes, but forgot to mention that he also takes Latin and English. You also showed our forges (which have been shown often enough), but completely forgot that Tech also has very fine language and science courses, not to mention many types of English.

Our unique marking system, which exempts those who graduate with Group 1 marks from taking college entrance exams, was entirely overlooked.

We do not expect you to eliminate anything that has to do with McKinley's technical courses but we should like you to give those who do take academic courses at McKinley as much recognition as their fellow students at other schools.

DORIS JANE PLISHKER.

Washington, March 4.

Editor's note: McKinley High School is the general academic secondary school for its neighborhood, but it is also the technical high school for Washington.

In "Our Town in Pictures" for March 3 The Post showed a typical student in McKinley's "specialty"—technical subjects.

The Pattern Makers League

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For many weeks Mr. Westbrook Pegler has been making irresponsible charges of dishonesty and dictatorship against all unions in affiliation with the A. F. of L. His only exceptions being a "few big unions," and their honesty is labeled "window dressing."

Mr. Pegler is more glib than accurate.

May I ask sufficient space to protect the reputation of our union from the scurrility of Mr. Pegler. Here are some facts contrasted with his scandal mongering.

The laws of the Pattern Makers League are proposed in convention and by initiative. They must be approved by referendum to be adopted. Conventions can be called by the membership once each year. Between conventions any officer can be recalled for cause. All votes are taken by secret printed ballot.

Every six months our "general executive board must select a certified public accountant to audit the books of the league. A detailed audit report of all finances including an itemized list of benefits paid to each member shall be published in the journal." Our miscellaneous account never exceeds $50 out of $50,000. Not much pickings if it all were as dishonest as the imagination of Mr. Pegler. Even the miscellaneous must be covered by approved vouchers. This report is a public record.

Officers expenses are limited to $8 a day while traveling. All above that must be paid out of salary.

The general president is bonded with a reputable bonding company for the faithful performance; every financial officer must furnish bond for honest handling of funds.

Benefits must be paid within 24 hours. During 53 years we have never defaulted on a single benefit.

We have never violated an agreement with an employer nor have they. Our union includes 75 per cent of our craftsmen in the United States and Canada. Labor Board records confirm that our craftsmen always selected our league as their bargaining agent.

I challenge Mr. Pegler to name one officer, local or national, who has violated our laws or accepted 1 cent of "white graft."

Lack of opportunity does not make or keep us honest. Our league, on a per capita basis, has a financial reserve as large as any union and larger than 90 per cent of the unions. We do business with practically every corporation using the services of pattern makers.

Mr. Pegler says he "can easily name 100 dishonest men in the A. F. of L." What is Mr. Pegler's knowledge of decent men and organizations? Can he name ten national organizations outside of the A. F. of L. operated as democratically and honestly as our union? Can he name even one newspaper which informs the public as to its receipts and expenditures? The press has a public responsibility as well as organized labor. Mr. Pegler is one such responsibility.

Following Mr. Pegler's line of reasoning all newspapers are dishonest because Moe Annenberg is a gentleman of the press.

(Seal.) GEORGE Q. LYNCH.
General President, Pattern Makers League of North America.
Washington, March 5.

Neighborhood Sentiment

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the District you have no vote, no choice in the appointment of your Commissioners, and the sentiment of property owners is a phrase bandied about by the guardians of our District, and used to suit their own purposes. As verification of this statement there are quoted here excerpts from two articles printed in all the Washington papers on March 1, 1940:

(1) "Mr. Allen and Commissioner Hazen admitted before a Senate subcommittee that they both owned race horses and sometimes attended the races, but stuck by their contention that the District is no place for a track on the ground that public sentiment in Washington is against it."

(2) "Making categorical answers to complaints voiced by the long list of residents, . . . the Zoning Commission held, among other things, that while the commission is deeply interested in the views of all persons 'the sentiment of a neighborhood is not a controlling factor' in a zoning case."

With the exception of a small group, who stood to profit financially, the Friendship community supported by all the neighboring sections, several citizens associations, churches, the American Legion, etc., protested and pleaded with the Commissioners not to permit Sears-Roebuck to erect a store in their neighborhood. They were not only overruled, but were denied a rehearing! If "the sentiment of a neighborhood is not a controlling factor," what was the controlling factor?

To normal husbands and wives, home is the center of the universe—a truth respected by all thinking people. The laws of God and man uphold the instinct in man to fight for his home. A man's home is his castle!

By permitting construction of a mammoth store on the 2½ acre lot bounded by Wisconsin avenue, Albemarle street, River road, and Murdock Mill road, the Commissioners have violated our neighborhood, and, therefore, our homes.

Many families will continue for a number of years their payments on homes bought at a higher price because of the restricted neighborhood. There is nothing to prevent this from happening anywhere in a district where the sentiment of a people matters nothing to its protectors.

HOME FOR SALE.

Washington, March 5.

"The Racing Bill"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Let me commend you for the strong and sane editorial on "The Racing Bill" in The Post of March 4. Altogether apart from the overwhelming sentiment of discriminating people against the proposal in the District of Columbia, there is a point, I think, that has been overlooked. The District of Columbia is a part of the Federal Government. It is not a thing off and by itself like a State government, but everything that goes on in the District of Columbia is in a sense the concern of the people of the entire Nation.

Inasmuch as there is a moral issue involved in this question, the Federal Government in its capacity as ruler of the District has no moral right to legitimatize a business within these bounds on which there is a divided opinion throughout the entire Nation. Let us not lose sight of this point.

The Post Impressionist

I Married A Sportswriter

Through sleet and snow, sun and rain, I have followed my husband—to the game!

It began with baseball.

This is a wonderful sport, and though I went to Griffith's Stadium every day, I never dreamed I could learn so fast. At last I could recite the American League—the St. Louis Browns, Detroit Tigers, Cleveland Indians, Boston White Sox, Philadelphia Red Sox (I think), the Washington Senators and the New York Yankees.

There's another league, too, which has the Giants in it and some Dodgers, but we didn't have to "cover" those. I made a bad error the first day.

I said I thought the players' uniforms were funny looking and that football clothes looked lots more romantic. This comment called for a long and careful explanation from everyone.

Now I think the long undershirt sleeves and tight half-mast pants look just lovely.

I learned about bunting, too. This is not to be confused, however, with football which has to do with punting. I found out also about Carrasquel, Appleton, Case (George Washington) and Chase, a pitcher who glowers at the men who have bats. But don't anybody forget the almost shutout game he pitched. I have forgotten just exactly what that means, but it's terribly important and I'll look it up before May when I think things start again.

There was also a man named Meat Head Oscar Vitt, the manager of the Cleveland Redskins, who got terribly mad at things. He stood over near the visiting dugout.

I learned all this on ten-cent-cokes and hot dogs. Get em' while they're hot—right out de pot.

As for score cards I can't say so much. I wrote S for strike and W for walk, but by the time I figured 2 to 5 to 7, there'd be a sacrifice—which reminds me that that was what S stood for. I don't believe I kept track of strikes. Well, anyway, score cards are a nuisance and Travis, Early and Lewis all seem to look alike, which made scoring for me practically impossible.

With the fall of the year came the fights, but these were too terrible and anyway, I thought I'd better rest up for football.

I really started learning football in a tremendous way. One day I saw three games in a row, and it helped me terribly much to learn about offsides and downs and things, but I felt tired afterward and had to miss a wonderful Redskin game on Sunday. I won't attempt to explain downs except that there are four—the game is divided into fours, too (quarters that is), and men with chains. I don't mean the men are chained like on a chain gang, but have the chains on rods. They go about measuring white lines.

I remember we drove down to Duke University at Durham, N. C., one day and saw a game with Syracuse, I believe. Then we drove back again. This tired me more than the three games in a row, but we had to get back because the coach of the Redskins was going to show some movies of a football game which we also had to see. I learned lots about clipping and saw loads of friends afterward. This all happened at the Duke game, not at the football movie.

Weren't the Redskins wonderful! Turk Edwards and Sammy Baugh and the marvelous entertainment between halves. I memorized a few of the positions like—halfback, quarterback, blocking back and something about a double wingback.

This last position isn't awfully clear to me like offsides is. Offsides is where the men keep bobbing up at each other before the man in the white knickers blows his whistle.

And right here I want to ask everyone something. Why is it that in the winter, when it is cold, the officials (who are supposed to know more about the game than anyone else, or else they wouldn't be officials) wear white, whereas, in the summer when it is hot, they wear blue, which is supposed to be much hotter than white?

A touchdown counts six and kicking between the goal posts counts one—this is about all there is to scoring. I once got very much confused here because my husband had just explained to me that it counted points for good kicking and then everyone ran out on the field and I asked, "what's happening?" and he answers, "the coach is kicking." The game was tied at this point, so I asked him if the coach's kick put us ahead.

Touchbacks count something, but are awfully rare.

Though there is less arguing than in baseball, football is much rougher, and the players have no regard for how many men they pile on one upon. Then, just as it really began to get brutally cold, we changed to ice hockey and here is a game that took me ages to master.

Ice hockey is played on the ice, of course. Six men to a side with goalies in goals at opposite ends. The idea is to get the puck into the other team's goal. This puck is a small hard rubber disk about an inch thick and is hit at by the boys with their curved hockey sticks. Here again offsides came into my life. It is an expression used as in football, but doesn't represent the same thing. I know what it means, but it's very complicated to explain and would only mix you up all the more.

It's a terrifically fast and exciting game and I have been watching them ever since before I started my Christmas shopping.

Hockey is practically the roughest game of all, and there are times when I can't look for fear I'll see some poor player being hurt, but when I suggested they pad the sides of the rink, to one of the coaches, he just kept on talking to my husband.

I wouldn't have brought all this up and gone into such detail except I believe explicitly in what my husband says and he's always saying:

"What's the matter with sports in this town? Nobody ever goes to see it."

I figure this is because people don't understand these games. I wouldn't have, I don't believe, if I hadn't married a sports writer. Now I realize everyone can't (or won't) marry a sports writer, so for those who can't I thought this might help.

Germany's War Aims

By Otto D. Tolischus

The Ideological Issue

Berlin, March 6.

WHILE THE INTENSIFIED discussion of German war aims resulting from Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles' visit to Berlin is rapidly boiling down these aims to the double slogan of "Freedom of the Lebensraum and freedom of the seas," backed up by American analogies, further discussion of the details and implications of these slogans quickly reveals the great gulf that exists not only between the German and Allied points of view, but also between the German and American.

The difference between Germany and the Allies lies not only in the matter of ideology but also in the matter of territories and power politics which involves their very existence. The difference between Germany and the United States, on the other hand, lies mainly in the matter of ideology and the future economic organization of the world.

AS REGARDS the first, the semiofficial Dienst Aus Deutschland tonight summarizes the issue in the following three points.

(1) Germany must smash the British claim to the rule of the seas, something which the United States did for its waters and commerce in the last century and as a consequence of the World War. This German struggle against British rule of the seas is not aggression but pure defense.

(2) Disarmament after the war must include naval disarmament.

(3) British key positions, which have proved to be the pillars of British sea rule and all of which were erected outside of national British territory, must be removed. British positions in Gibraltar, Cyprus, Malta and the Suez Canal are becoming intolerable and untenable not only for Germany but also for the Mediterranean nations and all neutrals. The same applies to the Bermuda Islands, well-known through the illegal British control of United States mail.

At the same time National Socialist speakers in the west are beginning to pay special attention to Alsace-Lorraine, which Joseph Buerckel, Reich commissioner for Austria, pronounced to be "German to the core" without raising a definite claim for it, and an important newspaper like the Munich Neueste Nachrichten, in considering the French colonial empire, declares that France's manpower is unable to fill it and therefore does not need it. The newspaper then states:

"The present conflict in Europe has again put in question the legitimacy of colonial titles of possession. In the world-historic collision between acquired or fraudulently obtained rights and the natural demands of the dispossessed, the test is being made as to whether the old conquering power is still alive, whether it has proved itself in colonial practice, whether it is capable of further development or whether the colonial colossus has feet of clay."

AS REGARDS the issue between Germany and the United States, all authorities emphasize that Germany does not desire to replace British sea power with German sea power and that, therefore, there is no chance of any collision between German continental and American continental power. But, as regards ideological and economic differences, they are revealed anew in German commentaries on Secretary of State Cordell Hull's diplomatic soundings regarding the reorganization of world economy after the war in such a way that liberty may be preserved. The Deutsche Allgemeine, for instance, write, "Hull preaches an antiquated system," and then continues:

"This shows Hull again wishes the present reciprocal foreign trade system of the United States, built up by him, as the foundation of future world trade. Even today he has not realized that this system is antiquated for a number of states, because it merely serves to keep these dispossessed countries in economic dependence on the great raw material powers of the West.

"It is also characteristic that London and Paris greeted Hull's declaration with enthusiasm and booked it as a victory for the Allied cause. It is particularly emphasized that with this declaration Hull declared bitter war against every economic autarchy and adopted the views of England and France. But these London and Paris commentaries are proof how necessary is the struggle for the authoritarian states against the monopolies of the Western countries and how vital their autarchic economy is.

MORTIMER J. ADLER
Do you know how to read? The chances, says Dr. Adler, are that you don't know. See Lewis Gannett's review below

Books & Things

By Lewis Gannett

Can You Read?

MORTIMER J. ADLER, President's right-hand man at the University of Chicago, doubts it. Probably, he says, when you were in love and reading a love letter, you read for all you were worth—you read between the lines and in the margins; you read the whole in terms of the parts, and each part in terms of the whole; you noted the color of words, the odor of phrases, the weight of sentences. That was reading as Mr. Adler uses the word. Since then, you have probably done little more than spell out words. That's what's wrong with democracy, he says; and that's why he wrote "How to Read a Book: The Art of Getting a Liberal Education" (Simon & Schuster, $2.50).

As for Mr. Adler himself, he got good grades at Columbia, and took a Ph. D. It was after that, when he began teaching, that he discovered that he didn't know how to read. In college he took John Erskine's two-year course called general honors, in which bright upper-class men read the "great books," from the Greek classics through the medieval masterpieces to James and Freud and Einstein—a book a week, 60 in two years. It seemed like a gold mine to young Adler, and he felt that he owned the gold . . . Then he tried to teach, and discovered how little he knew. He used encyclopedias and commentaries to patch up the weak spots in his ignorance. And then he listened to Mark Van Doren teach poetry. (The nearest you and I can come to that experience is to read Mr. Van Doren's "Shakespeare.") He realized that Mark Van Doren had really read, in a sense that he had not.

ONE MAY SUSPECT that Mr. Adler learned more from St. Thomas' Aquinas than from Mark Van Doren. For, through all but one chapter of his book, he is talking about a very special kind of reading, which he believes is the essential discipline which democracy needs and progressive educators have neglected. He begins by ruling out of court reading for amusement; later he narrows his definition further still. Reading, he says, is learning; and of the two types of reading for learning, he is interested, not in reading for information—"cramming"—but in reading for understanding. That requires rereading, or reading on several levels at once. Mr. Adler confesses that, expert as he is, he doesn't expect himself to read—really read—more than ten new books in a year.

He reads with a pencil in his hand. He reads sitting up at a desk. He has no interest in that art of rapid reading preached by Dr. Walter Pitkin. Real reading involves thinking. "I cannot go on reading the next page," says Mr. Adler, "if I do not make a memo of something which occurred to me in reading this one." The notes he makes, on a jot pad, in the margin, or on the end papers of a book, become documents in his intellectual autobiography, so intimate, often, that he does not care to lends books he has really read.

Third Term Enigma

By Mark Sullivan

Is It Solved?

NEWSPAPER READERS and radio listeners may have failed to understand completely a flood of news about Mr. Roosevelt and a third term, which spread out from Washington this week, excepting such as knew what preceded. From the whole series of incidents, some faint illumination may be had.

On Monday, an especially arresting third-term story was published in The Washington Post. The writer, Mr. Ernest K. Lindley, is close to Mr. Roosevelt, has written a friendly biography of him, was chosen by Mr. Roosevelt as one of the board to manage the library containing the Presidential papers at Hyde Park. In saying this, it is not meant to imply that Mr. Lindley's story was inspired, but merely that Mr. Lindley would hardly have written it unless he had especially good reason to believe it accurate.

THE LINDLEY story described a visit made to Mr. Roosevelt some weeks ago by a Southern Democratic Congressman. The story represents Mr. Roosevelt as telling his visitor, in part:

That he was not going to run again, that he was tired. That if it should happen that the Germans overrun England and head in our direction, he "won't desert the ship." But that it was time for some one else to take over the job of the Presidency.

That Mr. Roosevelt regarded Secretary of State Hull as a good candidate for the Presidency. That for the Vice Presidency he mentioned Attorney General Robert H. Jackson, former Governor Paul V. McNutt, and Senator Wheeler, of Montana. That although he likes Postmaster General Farley greatly, he did not feel it would be expedient to name Mr. Farley as the Vice Presidential candidate.

Mr. Lindley's story ended with the White House visitor saying to friends, afterward, that he hoped Mr. Roosevelt would stick to his decision, but that he was not certain whether Mr. Roosevelt would.

That was printed Monday. The following day occurred the President's first press conference after his return from the South. An exceptionally large number of newspaper men trooped in. At once came questions about the third-term story. Mr. Roosevelt took the questions with a good humor which seemed genuine, and not, as sometimes, a camouflage for evasion. He said his attention had been called to the story but that he had not read it. (Although, somewhat maladroitly—if one can ever accuse Mr. Roosevelt of erring in adroitness—he later spoke of having read a different story in the same paper.) With infinite versatility, of parrying and fending, Mr. Roosevelt eluded a score of questions designed to bring out a comment on the story. Mr. Roosevelt gave the newspaper men many laughs, but no enlightment. The newspaper men had a good time—but got no grist for their mill.

WHAT SHALL we make of it all? Every newspaper man in Washington would like to know, for the sake of the best story of the year. Every Democrat in the country would like to know, to be able to guide his own course accordingly. There was, in the original story, a phrase that might be cryptic. Mr. Roosevelt had said to his visitor that if the Germans overrun England and head our way, he would not "desert the ship." Does that mean he would try to remain in the Presidency? Or does that refer to another curious story that has bobbed in the current of Washington gossip, to the effect that Mr. Roosevelt, after his present term, would like to trade places with Mr. Hull—Mr. Hull to be President, Mr. Roosevelt to be Secretary of State.

If that is what Mr. Roosevelt meant by "won't desert the ship," then he has not yet taken a position on the third term as an abstract, impersonal issue; but if Mr. Roosevelt meant that in a given contingency he would run for President again, then he had said, in effect, that he sees no objection to a third term on principle. But perhaps we had better not attach too much significance to the words "won't desert the ship." After all, they passed through at least three transmissions, from Mr. Roosevelt's lips to the printed story.

The story about Mr. Roosevelt's talk with his Congressional visitor seems to make his running contingent upon the war going on and the Germans winning—it is in that case that he would not desert the ship. Much of Washington has assumed it would be the approach of peace that Mr. Roosevelt would see as justification for attempting to remain in office.

WHEN MR. ROOSEVELT sent Undersecretary of State Welles abroad a few weeks ago; and when, about the same time, he sent Mr. Myron Taylor to be a kind of unofficial representative at the Vatican, it was widely assumed that these steps were meant by Mr. Roosevelt to set up a mechanism for peace. If Mr. Roosevelt, with the Pope, could bring about negotiations for peace, and if these negotiations were actively under way, in the sight of the world, as the Democratic National Convention and the November election approach, there would be justification for Mr. Roosevelt hoping that the United States would wish to keep him in office until the peace negotiations were completed.

It is all speculative. The facts about the third term are, that Mr. Roosevelt's name is entered in several primaries; that he is unlikely to withdraw his name now, because that would make confusion even greater; that where Mr. Roosevelt's name is in, other candidates, excepting Vice President Garner, stay out. And that in the primaries where Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Garner are pitted against each other, Mr. Roosevelt is likely to get the delegates. As things stand, Mr. Roosevelt is likely to have enough delegates in the convention to give him the nomination if he wants it.

The Japan Of Today

By Frank H. Hedges

III—The Internal Economy

This is the third and last of a series of articles by Mr. Hedges on contemporary Japan.

Tokyo.

COLD WEATHER, coupled with less perceptible factors, has brought the war from the soil of China to the soil of Japan, thereby crystallizing a dozen or so serious internal problems with which the government of Premier Mitsumasa Yonai is now struggling to cope.

It was only with the coming of cold weather that really serious shortages in such vital necessities of life as coal and charcoal, electric power, rice, sake, matches and other commodities developed to a point where they press heavily upon wellnigh every man, woman and child in the empire, thus causing them to realize in a very direct way that their nation is waging a major war.

Shortages had come into existence prior to last November, but they had touched only a comparative few and, except for certain invalids, had not been of major importance. Many imported drugs have been difficult if not impossible to obtain for some time past. Cameras and foreign film packs, soaps from abroad and luxurious cosmetics were missed, but their lack constituted no real hardship.

THE DECREASED supplies on hand and the comparatively small amounts imported of cotton and wool were of more importance, as was the shortage of leather, rubber and certain other goods. Japanese substitutes are available for these articles, however. They are not as good, as durable nor as satisfactory in other ways, but at least they are sufficiently substantial to suffice. Some grumbling arose, but most of it was good-natured and the public rather enjoyed the comfortable belief they were thus making sacrifices for their brave soldierlads.

On September 1 "Asia Development Day" was proclaimed, to be observed the first day of each subsequent month. On this day, one is supposed not to smoke, to drink or to eat more than a one-dish meal. September 1 was almost a lark and was well kept. October 1, although tobacco shops and bars were closed, as well as many restaurants, the day was less well kept, and it has continued to be less and less so ever since. Those hotels and restaurants which cater to the foreign population are filled to overflowing the first of each month by Japanese who slip in, away from the sight of their fellow countrymen, to quaff their wine, puff their cigars or cigarettes and gorge themselves.

WHEN WINTER dawned the ordinary Japanese family found it could no longer buy as much rice as it was accustomed to, its little charcoal stoves had to remain empty because of shortage of fuel, its daily sake ration was half water, its winter underwear was no longer wool but a sort of rayon substitute, its matches were exhausted and no more were on the market, in some cities light and water supplies were strictly limited and in still other ways daily life became handicapped. This was no longer a joke or a picnic, and it gave the public to think seriously.

The government made strenuous efforts to increase the supplies, particularly of rice, coal and charcoal, yet was able to accomplish little. As in any shortage, prices which had been going steadily but gradually upward since the outbreak of hostilities began to soar. Already, on September 19, the government had suddenly proclaimed that the price levels in existence the day previous must remain the same for certain essential commodities, and it now redoubled its efforts to maintain what it fondly calls its "low-price policy," a policy which has life in newspaper pages and official decrees only.

A Black Bourse for most commodities exists, and if one really wants to buy as much of this or that as desired one pays not the figure on the price tag but whatever the dealer may ask, in some extreme cases double the official price. Moreover, the government blundered badly, for the price of both rice and tobacco were raised after the official figure had been set, and tobacco is a government monopoly in Japan. Nearly everyone smokes, so that a jump in the cost of cigarettes hit nearly every pocketbook, and grumbling was the order of the day against a government which "profiteered" for itself but made private merchants sell sometimes at a loss. The official price level is up by more than a third since the war started. The Black Bourse price level, is whatever the traffic will bear.

If the war industries be excepted, the wage level has not even begun to keep pace with the price rise. Teachers and other professional workers, the "white collar class," are most hard hit. As compared to the economic plight of the intellectual and farming groups, the war workers are rolling in luxury. They are being paid wages formerly beyond their wildest dreams. It is almost impossible to keep domestic servants, for even an unskilled housemaid can desert to some war plant and double, treble or even more greatly increase her monthly income.

The nouveaux riches, if they can be called that, spend as freely as they earn, bring a false prosperity amounting to a boom in certain lines of business. They crowd into the theaters and restaurants. Geishadom has never been so prosperous. Jewelers can scarcely supply the demand for fine watches and expensive jewelry. Elaborate kimono and obi (the expensive Japanese sash) are being worn by women who formerly knew nothing but cotton garments. Factory workers actually organize group parties to spend a few days and nights in the foreign-style hotels built primarily to cater to foreign tourist trade.

Naturally, the manners of the former day laborer when in an expensive cafe are not exactly of the best, but he is the man with the cash and so the management is courteous to him. Naturally also, this ostentatious display of newly found wealth is most obnoxious to the middle and upper-class, and is particularly irritating to the returned soldier who has come back from genuine hardships on one or another of the China fronts to find his neighbor, formerly earning 50 yen a month, now making 200 yen or more and vulgarly flaunting it in his face.

THE PSYCHOLOGICAL effect of these developments is tremendous and their ultimate consequences cannot yet be gauged, but consequences in the social and even political world they must have, just as much as in the economic. It gives government officials and national leaders many a headache—and there is a shortage of aspirin in Japan.

Although of less importance psychologically, the most menacing shortage to national economy is that of power supply. Droughts last summer and on through the winter have necessitated drastic curtailment in electric power. A coal shortage exists also, although in this case a more efficient system of transportation would do much to relieve it. Without enough coal or hydroelectric power, production is cut down, and this means shortages in goods. In western Japan, factories have had to reduce their power supply by 40 per cent for the time being. In the City of Kobe, two days a week there is no electric light or elevator service during daylight hours, and two days a week there is no heat permitted in office buildings and factories. With the drastic curtailment of productive capacity, Japan's exports naturally suffer. It is with these exports Japan must obtain the foreign exchange essential to the purchase of war supplies for victory in China and of necessities at home.

The government is seeking to retire as much of the note issue in circulation as possible, for it is now roughly six times as great as the specie reserve in the vaults of the Bank of Japan. No one knows exactly what Japan's gold reserve is, for those acquainted with the nation entertain the belief that the government has never given the full amount out for publication. Certain it is that large gold shipments are still being sent to New York.

The government has a materials' mobilization plan which is supposed to go hand in hand with the budget figures, and an accompanying productivity expansion plan. These are secret, but the diet has called for their presentation at a session in camera. The general public will still be kept in ignorance, yet it requires no college education to realize that with industrial production greatly reduced because of power shortage and lack of imported raw materials the expansion of production must remain a rosy dream.

THE TOTAL BUDGET for the next fiscal year, now being debated in the diet, is more than 10,000,000,000 yen (about $2,500,000,000). It was less than 20 years ago that Japan had its first billion yen budget. In all likelihood, additional supplementary budgets will be forthcoming. Taxation is being increased somewhat, but much of this expenditure, which is gigantic for Japan in view of its national wealth, must be met by red ink bond issues. These perforce will be domestic issues, since there is no market abroad for Japanese government bonds today, despite the empire's impeccable credit record.

Foreign trade returns for 1939 give Japan a favorable balance, but it is purely illusory. It is built up entirely by exports to the yen bloc nations of Manchoukuo and occupied China. The balance against the rest of the world, whence comes vital foreign exchange, is adverse to Japan. It is almost ironical that China and Manchoukuo give Japan a favorable balance when it is remembered that for years the government has preached that these two nations would be Japan's economic life-line. Instead, they now constitute a drain on commodities needed sorely at home, which are paid for in what amounts to Japan's own money. Instead of a help they are a hindrance economically at present, no matter what bright promises are given for the future.

Among other internal questions the government is forced to face is the growing unrest and dissatisfaction of the public at large. This is intangible and a most dangerous subject to discuss. Suffice it to say that it exists and has been increasing almost hourly during the past three or four months. The psychological change now taking place in Japan is tremendous. The public does not know what it wants, nor how to alter present conditions, but it does know definitely that something is wrong and that some change is necessary. If ever the Japanese people decide what that change should be, they can be depended upon to go after and get it.

A Forester's Heart

By Rexford Guy Tugwell

The Late A. F. Silcox

The following is excerpted from Mr. Tugwell's memoir in the current number of The New Republic.

HE HAD BEEN out of the service for 16 years. And here I was, an Assistant Secretary, begging him to become Chief Forester. He swore that he would never submit. But I was sure of my argument; and when he thought it over, the strangeness did appear superficial. The circumstances fitted him. He had been for what we called a New Deal back in the days when it was "Square" instead of "New;" before that even, when the unromantic guarding of the public interest day in and day out had not yet been dramatized by T. R. and Pinchot. He had been a ranger when roads and even trails were scarce, before saws had been mechanized, when lookouts were few and remote, and when radios were unheard of.

From struggling alone with fire, with poachers, with overgrazers and wasteful cutters, his sense of guardianship had grown close to the bone. He had served through the scandals in Taft's Administration, choking with righteousness, voluble with wrath, and had survived to negotiate honest agreements afterwards. Like so many old-time foresters his temper had been set by these experiences. No blandishments—not even the offer from Mr. Harold Ickes of the undersecretaryship—would ever persuade him that the Department of the Interior was not a haven for all the devils of land speculation and timber wastage.

HE HAD GOT to be a regional forester at Missoula by the first summer of the Great War. It was more necessary then than now to depend on local labor for fighting the dangerous fires of autumn. The Civilian Conservation Corps had not yet been thought of. And what with the draft and a booming agriculture the supply of men was all used up. It was unusually dry that season and the fire losses threatened to be extreme. To understand the awfulness of Silcox's resort in this crisis it has to be remembered what a Red scare there was abroad in those days. It was the high point for the I. W. W., the "Wobblies," the "I Won't Works." Their syndicalist philosophy and their direct methods appealed especially to brutalized casual workers who manned the lumber camps and followed the harvests north from California as the season advanced.

In late summer there were numbers of them congregated in Missoula carrying on a guerrilla warfare with farmers, timber owners and factory managers. The propaganda against them was terrific. They had grown wary and sullen and were beginning to look at the idea of revolution as something not so strange, now that it had been flung at them persistently for weeks. Certainly they were more than ever determined to sell their labor dear, regardless of the "boys over there" who were said to be suffering because of their withholding.

One morning Silcox, made desperate by reports from tired rangers of new fires everywhere, went round to Wobbly headquarters, and, after some maneuvering, got first a half-dozen, then 20, then a whole hallful to listen as he talked. What he had to say was that he understood their philosophy to include the public ownership of all national resources. There was one—the forests—which the Government had already got a share of. And day by day it was going up in smoke.

He pointed out that when the workers took over the Government, its assets might as well be delivered in good order. That was his job; but he seemed to be failing at it. He had appealed to everyone else he could think of. Factory owners were making too much money; farmers were hustling in their crops; the workers he had usually depended on were, those of them still left, getting wages higher than he could pay. Did the I. W. W. have enough faith in their own future to come out and save forests which, if they were right, would some day belong to them?

They would and did. There never was such fire fighting! And, after it was over, Silcox could not resist bragging a little and twitting the sacred upper classes of Montana.

AFTER I telephoned to him that day in 1933 he was for nearly seven years chief of the service in which he had been bred—its best, as foresters anywhere will report, after Pinchot.

His achievements were greater, perhaps, in security, morale, uplift everywhere, than in actual change. He had a program for reorganization which one thing after another seemed to postpone. It still remains for his successor to carry through.

But he fought valiantly for sustained yield on private as well as public holdings; he added enormously to Eastern and Southern forest areas; he utilized the opportunity furnished by the CCC to build thousands of miles of trail and phone line, to set up hundreds of recreation camps, to plant, to thin and to harvest millions on millions of trees; and he filled a generation of young foresters—not all pack-horse rangers as he had been, but many of them scientists, management experts, even statisticians—with a wholly new spirit, one which contained the old loyalties but which went far beyond them.

It was very probably an old trail-stain on his heart which caused its final failure. He had been on notice for some time. We spent a strenuous day together in May going over the hurricane clean-up work in New England. I asked him then about that heart. He called my attention to lilac and syringa which seemed to hide the devastation a little. I insisted. He mumbled something. Then I said sharply that he was clearly doing too much.

"They say it'll quit someday," he admitted, and then in a high, humorous, bragging voice, "but by God it'll be a forester's heart as long as it lasts." He laughed. But I didn't. The sentiment he tried to hide in burlesque I knew was genuine; at any rate he did not let up and it did quit in December.

There are so many nations waiting to get into this world war that it may be necessary to announce a waiting list.

There was this about the last war: you could at least tell what nations were NOT in it.

There are prospects of race tracks at Secaucus, N. J., just across the Hudson; at Oceanport, N. J., and at Atlantic City this coming year; and maybe a couple of new ones around New York. This is going to complicate life still further. A man won't be able to go for a walk any more without bumping into a race track.

By this Sunday most of the male prisoners at the District Jail will have been moved into the two new detention wings to make way for complete remodeling of the old structure. The wings were completed March 1.

Built at a cost of $973,000 the wings will accommodate 314 inmates. Each wing contains 82 single cells, a large dormitory with a 50-inmate capacity, and two smaller dormitories, one holding 12 and the other, 13 prisoners.

Due to the present population of some 535 inmates, however, some of the male prisoners will remain in the two large dormitories in the old structure. The women will remain where they now are in the East Wing. The plan is to set aside one of the detention wings for women prisoners.

This work was financed by the Public Works Administration, the work having been done by the John McShain Co., of Baltimore.

Just as soon as the movement of the inmates is completed, the Baltimore company will begin work on remodeling old cell blocks. This work is expected to be completed by June 18.

The District now has an appropriation for $250,000, with which to build a new administration and hospital building. When the bids were first asked, however, every bid was well in excess of the money available. As a result, the Commissioners requested an additional $64,000. This sum was not approved in the deficiency bill, but probably will be included in the 1941 budget.

When this new building is completed, the new plant will provide quarters for 804 inmates.

Superintendent Thomas M. Rives of the District Jail said it might be necessary to place two inmates in some of the cells for a short time pending the completion of the remodeling job.

Well-lighted and scientifically built, the new cells, as well as the corridors, are air-conditioned. The old jail was recently visited by Chairman D'Alesandro of the House subcommittee investigating local welfare institutions.

"He's safe. He can be elected."

By Ernest K. Lindley.

The first seven years are over. How many more will there be: less than one or nearly five?

Excepting the newspapermen, who have pestered him to little avail, surprisingly few people have had the courage to ask the President point-blank about his political plans for 1940 and beyond. They have tried to draw him out by indirection. They have deduced what they could from his chance remarks and general behavior. They have pumped his closest political associates and the members of his family—and received conflicting replies and hints.

Just before the President went South for his trip to Panama, however, one of the elderly stalwarts of the Democratic Party decided that he had had enough of mystery. He asked for an appointment with the President, and was granted it. This, in substance, is the conversation which ensued:

Visitor—Mr. President, I've been in Democratic politics and in Congress longer than most people, and for seven years I've gone down the line with you. Now for months I have been reading and hearing all kinds of reports about your plans. I feel I'm entitled to know what they are. So I've come here to find out directly from you what are we going to do this year? Are you going to run for a third term?

R.—No—I'm not going to run again. I'm getting tired. It's time for someone else to take over this job. Of course, if the Germans overrun England and head in our direction I won't desert the ship. But unless something like that happens, I won't run again.

V.—If you don't run, Mr. President, who is the man? Whom do you think we should nominate?

R.—Well, I think Hull would be a good man, don't you? (The President knew that his visitor is a warm friend and admirer of the Secretary of State.) He's safe. He can be elected. He would keep us out of war. And he's a lot more liberal than a lot of people around here think he is. Of course, if we nominate Hull, we'll have to pick a strong man of recognized liberalism for Vice President.

V.—Whom do you have in mind, Mr. President?

R.—There's Bob Jackson. He's able, and smart, and liberal. There's Paul McNutt. He's a capable man. And there's Burt Wheeler—another good man. And there are others. We all have our individual preferences. Of course, some of these men have disagreed with me at times, and I have disagreed with them. But that's to be expected. I think we are all trying to go in the same general direction. We have some good men to choose from and I think we can all get together on a winning ticket.

V.—You didn't mention Jim Farley, Mr. President. What about him for Vice President with Cordell Hull?

R.—You know how fond I am of Jim Farley. He's a wonderful fellow. He's done a great job for the Democratic Party. I don't know of anyone more deserving of recognition by the party. And he's done more for me politically than any other living person, not even excepting my wife, But—— I've been traveling about and talking to people from all over this country for a good many years now. You know what a lot of people down your way would think and say if we nominated Jim for Vice President. I know, too, because I've lived among them. They'd say we were using Cordell Hull as a stalking horse for the Pope.

V.—That's right, Mr. President.

R.—And lots of other people in other parts of the country would say the same thing. I'm afraid we'd stir up a lot of prejudices and emotions that would confuse the whole picture. We might even end up with another Al Smith debacle. Right?

V.—I'm afraid you're right, Mr. President. I like Jim, but we'd run the risk of stirring up unnecessary trouble by putting him on the ticket. . . . I'm mighty pleased to hear what you said about Cordell Hull.

There ends the account of the conversation.

In reporting this to a close friend, the elderly, wise, and utterly reliable visitor added: I hope he sticks by that resolution. But I'm not sure, yet. The lure of the Presidency may hold him. He looks energetic enough . . .

So ends the latest report on the exploration of the mind of the sphinx.

THE CAPITAL DEBUNKED
("A little debunking is wholesome."
—Fra Miller.)

In a rare moment of levity, no doubt, Thomas Jefferson once suggested that newspapers should divide their contents into four categories, headed plainly (1) True; (2) Probable; (3) Possible, and (4) Lies.

I resent that. But I'm willing to give Mr. Jefferson's theory a whirl, though I suspect he must have thought journalists superhuman, to be able to distinguish automatically the degree of likelihood and veracity in the things politicians tell them.

TRUTH: The dome on the U. S. Capitol is approximately in the middle . . . Our next President will be either a Democrat or a Republican . . . By July 17 we will know whether FDR does or doesn't want a third term . . . We never knew whether Cal Coolidge did.

None of the 20 top officials in Washington is trying to get us into this war. . . . The Capitol is nearer the ocean but farther from Europe than the White House. . . . A Senator's dignity as he walks across the Senate reminds me of a pelican rising from a Florida bayou.

"—Jefferson wanted truth segregated"

PROBABLE: Half the people have forgotten that the war began with Germany's invasion of Poland. . . . Hoover thinks he could defeat Roosevelt. . . . So far the war is just armed economics, a test whether Germany's or England's trade lanes are more vulnerable.

The next President will not be a bachelor . . . Roosevelt does not want a third term . . . Next to FDR Hull is the likeliest Democratic nominee, but declines to make an overt gesture toward the White House . . . Sumner Welles will talk to Hitler more plainly than anyone else has in five years.

POSSIBLE: As foreshadowed in this column two months ago, and later repeated elsewhere with too much emphasis, there's a slim chance that FDR might be Secretary of State in a Hull cabinet . . . If FDR is the nominee there may be heat on Garner to accept the Vice Presidency again for the sake of harmony and a united front.

We may be stuck with 18 billions in gold if we don't take steps. . . . Roosevelt may denounce the crust of those who accused him of wanting a third term. . . . He may nail down the two-term tradition forever. . . . A third term fight might create the greatest national schism since the Civil War.

"—from black lies in the news"

LIES: That the war will last 30 years. . . . That the typewriters at G. O. P. headquarters, grinding out 100 speeches a week, are waxing cooled. . . . That Lord Lothian, the British Ambassador, has a cot at the State Department. . . . That anyone in Washington is much overheated about British censorship of American mail to Europe.

That smart Republicans think it's criminal for Roosevelt not to blurt out his third term intentions. . . . That they wouldn't behave like Roosevelt in a similar contingency. . . . That any one can wreck or save the Republic unaided. . . .

There you are, Mr. Jefferson. You seemed to forget that when an important politician tells an important lie, that's news, and a newspaper can print it as truth—not guaranteeing the utterance is true, but that the politician said it. So much of the warp and woof of political action consists of opinion, half-truths, trial balloons, speculation, theory, white lies, evasions, claims and windowdressing that I do not think the sorriest citizen is fooled much.

DO YOU KNOW WHAT'S GOING ON?

Third-Term Bulletin:

Roosevelt to Break Silence— He'll Tell the Census Man!

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt yesterday jovially turned aside three direct third-term queries but said he might confide in a Government census taker just to see if he would keep the secret.

In high good humor, the President parried, sidestepped or smilingly ignored press conference questions on his political plans that have met impatient rejoinders at some White House press sessions.

He said he had not read a column in Monday's Post by Ernest K. Lindley, his biographer and friend. The article quoted the President as having informed a Southern member of Congress that he wanted to retire, favored Secretary of State Hull for President, and cited the religion of Postmaster General Farley as an objection in the South to Farley on the ticket.

The President said he knew nothing about his name having been entered in the Pennsylvania Presidential preference primaries and so could not answer a query on whether he would withdraw it.

When a reporter caught him up on a statement that no one had anything to hide from the Government, and asked if he had a mortgage on 1600 Pennsylvania avenue, he joined in the general laughter. He said he might tell a genuine census taker, to test out the Government's ability to keep information confidential.

He repeatedly insisted he had not read the front page column by Lindley. But he had read, he said, a column on the second page in the same issue of The Post by Harlan Miller, discussing the four Jeffersonian categories of news—truths, probabilities, possibilities or lies.

Pressed as to whether The Post article came within the "truth" category, the President laughed again, saying he di[d]

All Groups Advance With Rumor That Roosevelt Will Not Seek a Third Term; Tractions Strong; Long-Term Bonds Higher

New York, March 5.—Security markets advanced all along the line today by virtue of more aggressive buying in a wider range of selected issues and a vague rumor which percolated through the financial district to the effect that President Roosevelt will not be a third-termer. Extraordinary activity and price strength in tractions and buoyancy in several of the aircraft shares gave

In Tuesday's Post

Wall Street stirred with excitement Tuesday. The lethargic stock market took a few hopeful jumps upward. "More aggressive buying in a wider range" was the report pecked out by financial writers.

In the west wing of the White House 175 impatient political correspondents shuffled in the corridor, jockeyed for position before the door leading into the President's office, crowded toward the front when the conference began. One question was in every mind, hung on every lip: "Mr. President . . ."

Would the President affirm? deny? Politically-wise, he chuckled, would do neither, denied having seen the front-page story, admitted having read The Post that morning, referred questioners to another Washington Post column, on page 2: Harlan Miller's column on Jefferson's classification of news—truths, possibilities, probabilities, lies. But he refused to indicate which applied to Lindley's story.

Reporters filed out, sent the news to their papers. And anti-third term Wall Street continued to buy stocks.

Again, The Washingon Post had scored, as it did in 1938 with its exclusive story disproving the charge that the Supreme Court and other Federal Courts were behind on their home work, as it did with its editorial which inspired the Hatch Act, as it did last April with an editorial on foreign policy pronounced by President Roosevelt, "very good, very clear, very honest."

Again Washington Post readers were ahead—non-readers were behind—in their knowledge of what goes on in Washington!

The Proper Blouse For Correct Spring Suit

By Marshall Adams.
The Post Fashion Editor.

Blouses are being called everything this spring from peek-a-boos, and bouffants to chemise tops. This is another way of saying they are soft, sheer and prettier than they have been in a long time. There are the usual tailored crepes, striped silks and strict sports blouses to give verve to casual suits, but for the tailored classic suit, the dainty sheer blouse is the logical answer. Swiss fabrics have played a prominent part in the new blouse modes because of the Swiss Fabric Groups' developments in cobwebby sheer cottons. The blouse above is typical of the fine workmanship and sheerness that both Swiss and domestic cottons can achieve over many other fabrics. It is of transparent organdy with figured lace inserts providing a provocative peek-a-boo look. The shirtwaist stlye of the blouse is softened with billowing sleeves and a high neckline tied with narrow ribbon.

This blouse at right is all dressed up with the trim town tailleur which reveals new suit tricks—lapel binding and a faint hair line stripe in the smooth finished worsted.

Mary Haworth's Mail

How Restore Unity to Marriage, When Wife Knows Of Husband's Amour, But Dares Not Tell Him?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Like most of your correspondents, I come to you with a problem that is too terribly personal to discuss with anyone I know. I've been married for 15 years and have three children. We are, apparently, happily married; but I have almost incontrovertible proof of my husband's infidelity over a period of some two years.

Looking back, I realize that I might have prevented the affair from going to far, if I hadn't adopted an ostrich-like attitude. I have always maintained that the "other woman" usually exists only in the imagination of a neurotic wife. I also believe that marriage should be founded upon implicit faith. So I determinedly closed my eyes to repeated indications that my husband might be giving me only a divided loyalty.

There has never, at any time, been any really noticeable change in his attitude toward me. As a matter of fact, I believe that he is still very much in love with me, in a comfortable married fashion. I'm inclined to think it is an affair of the "foolish forties," rather than any dissatisfaction with his marriage.

While reluctantly convinced of my husband's infidelity, I have no proof of the "other woman's" identity. But I think she is a girl who used to be in his office. I have met her at organization social affairs and she is tongue tied, ill at ease and rather dull. Her attraction for my husband is, I am sure, her youth. She was only 17 when she first came to work for him. Youth and propinquity have been her weapons. And I don't know—I can't be sure—that the affair is still going on. My husband was instrumental in having her transferred to another department about two months ago, which might indicate that he wanted to end the whole thing.

I suppose the wronged wife always feels that the other woman couldn't possibly make her husband happy and in our case I think it is obviously true. There is too much disparity in their ages, education, background and intellectual and social interests. And yet, I have always sensed a craving on my husband's part for the wide-eyed, abject worship which someone who is not his social or intellectual equal might give him. But I know, too, how impatient he is with dullness and mediocrity, and how unhappy he would be if he had to live with it.

I'm not sure that my reaction to the situation is normal. I feel little or no jealousy of the girl. And while the fact that my husband has transgressed the moral code distresses me, the thing I can't face or cope with is my increasing revulsion to physical intimacy. I cannot continue to share marital intimacy with a man who has the same relationship with another woman. It seems to me that any normally fastidious woman must feel as I do, and yet the emotion of jealousy, not physical revulsion, is usually stressed as the wife's reaction to the "triangular" episode.

I have loved my husband deeply. I think I might even conquer my revulsion and love him again, if I could end the affair or be sure it was ended. But if my husband knew that I knew of the affair, I'm sure we could never again achieve any sort of normal life together. I think he is already afraid that I have begun to suspect something—as it is hard to disguise completely my revulsion. But he mustn't know that I know.

So what can I do? I've always been somewhat amused at "nervous breakdowns," but I'm honestly afraid I shall have something of the sort if I don't find a way to end my husband's relationship with the other woman (whoever she may be; for you understand I am only guessing at her identity). I intended to be brief, coherent and analytical and, of course, I've failed. My emotions are too deeply involved to permit of that. Can you tell me what to do? M. G.

Future Unity Depends On Mutual Candor Now

DEAR M. G.: In my opinion, you err in thinking that your husband "must not know" that you are aware of his infidelity. I cannot agree that judicious inquiry into the state of mind which prompted him to be unfaithful would permanently spoil your chances of achieving "a normal life together" in future. On the contrary, I am decidedly of the opinion that the present psychic impasse can only be dissolved by civilized, objective discussion of the obstacles to unity that have arisen.

Jealousy, we are told by the psychologists, is a confession of inferiority-feeling. Your sense of self esteem is such that you feel in all ways superior to your supposed rival. Therefore, you are not jealous of her. But you are enormously disappointed in your husband, that he could share with a supposedly inferior woman the emotional experiences he has known with you.

The fact that he could be unfaithful at all; and particularly that he could be guilty of bland deception—turning blithely to you with what appears to be hypocritical ardor after possessing another woman—all this is a terrific shock to your sensibilities, and seems to call for revision of your erstwhile admirable estimate of the man. Where once you surrendered to married love as a spiritual covenant—an inviolably intimate affirmation and renewal of sacred pledges—now the experience seems a desecration, an outrage, an animal exercise, which smirches your very soul when you participate. And so you present revulsion to marital intimacy—a normal reaction to betrayal, as you say, on the part of an emotionally fastidious woman.

This, in essence, is your side of the story; the explanation you have to give your husband, as to why you cannot encourage his love through a critical period, when he perhaps needs your psychic allegiance as never before, if the marriage is to survive, intact as its emotional core—the strain of the counter-attraction.

What is his version? Where, how, in what ways, have you failed him, that he seems not to have found a sufficiency of love and understanding at home? Invite, assist him, to tell his story—in the manner of one seeking light in appraising her own shortcomings, rather than as one pointing the finger of scorn and reproach at him. This I believe to be the only basis for a happier future; the only dependable approach to better mutual understanding, which alone will make possible a restoration of faith and acceptance on your part; and complete fidelity on his part.

Though two persons be joined in wedlock for an eon, they are not really married in the sense of being one flesh," unless they possess or until they have achieved oneness of mind and heart—which is to say, a faculty for comprehending and accomodating themselves each to the other's viewpoint. Thus, I feel that so long as you lack the courage to invite for discussion so significant a mystery as this confronting you, you are failing through cowardice to discharge one of wifehood's major obligations. Today's Health Talk

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Tongue's Function

WHAT has become of the old-fashioned practice of looking at the patient's tongue?

Good doctors still look at the tongue, although probably they do not claim to gather as much information from it as the old general practitioner who used to take the temperature, look at the tongue, feel the pulse, look at the skin and call it a day so far as physical examination was concerned.

Like everything else, practice in examination of the tongue brings out a number of things which gain in significance as they are studied. The tongue is a good organ for the household doctor or house mother to study for this reason.

The state of moisutre of the tongue is fraught with important information. A dry, brown, furred tongue is of serious import, whereas the return of moisture and the disappearance of the fur indicate improvement.

Movements Important

The movements of the tongue are of significance. They way in which it is protruded may indicate slight or marked paralysis in elderly people.

Tremor of the tongue, tremulousness, may be a sign of nervousness in a healthy person or weakness in an exhausted one. It is not infrequently a sign of over-indulgence in alcohol and one that cannot be concealed.

Disturbances of taste may occur in fever, in shock and in nerve disease. In facial palsy taste is lost over the anterior two-thirds of the tongue. When the nerve of taste, the glossopharyngeal nerve, is paralyzed, loss of taste occurs over the posterior third of the tongue.

Taste is tested by using the four primary sensations—bitter, sweet, sour and salt, with solutions of quinine, sugar, vinegar and salt.

Coating of the tongue probably has not as much significance as was once believed. It usually meant upset of the stomach or of the digestive tract generally. Of course, a dry tongue, such as occurs in fever and shock, will be accompanied by furring.

Egg Delicacy

EGG dumplings are good at any time, but they are particluarly good when served with roast veal. They may also be cooked and served in soup. They should be very light and delicate, and the following recipe is one that makes that kind.

Egg Dumplings

Beat 2 eggs and combine them with 1½ cups flour, 1 cup water and ½ teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon baking powder. Beat these ingredients well. Drop small bits of batter from spoon into simmering salted water or place it on a plate and cut shreds of the batter with a knife from the side of the plate into the water, or put the batter through a colander. Try out a sample and if they are too heavy add water to the batter. Simmer them until they are done. Drain them, place them in a dish and cover them with croutons or ¼ cup bread crumbs sauted in ½ cup butter.

When buying fish allow a third of a pound to a serving for steak, canned or fillets. It will take about half a pound a serving for fish with bones, head and tail on. Fish that is fresh will sink in cold

Measurements For 'Perfect' Figure Vary

Movie Stars Show That Structure Determines tandard

By Ida Jean Kain

THERE is no standard set of measurements for any given height; perfect measurements vary according to structure. Some of the movie stars who are the same height perfectly illustrate the wide difference in lovely figures.

Ida Lupino, Olivia de Haviland and Dolores Del Rio are all five feet three and one-half inches tall—and each has a different set of measurements. Miss Lupino, who weighs 109 streamlined pounds, has this figure: Bust, 45 inches; waist, 25 inches; hips, 34 inches. It is easy to account for her beautiful proprtions. She has exercised regularly since she was a little girl.

Likes To Walk

Miss De Haviland weighs 110 pounds but has a slight structure and her measurements are: Bust, 32 inches; waist, 23½ inches; hips, 3- inches. She likes to walk and believes the best way to keep the hipline under control is to walk up hill and down dale. Incidentally, she is very impatient with people who diet strenuously. She believes anyone can keep weight perfect simply by not over-eating. She makes a habit of taking milk instead of desserts—and there's a good beauty tip for you.

Dolores Del Rio weighs 115 pounds. She is said to have one of the world's most beautiful figures. Here are her measurements: Bust, 34 inches; waist, 24 inches; hips, 35½ inches. She never diets but eats moderately. She regards calisthenics as a dreadful bore and takes her exercise out in walking, swimming and dancing. The glamorous Latin believes the real secret of beauty—and that includes a good figure—is to spend as much time as possible out of doors each day.

Although there is no standard set of measurements, proportions are fairly well standardized. In these figures, the waistline is from 8 to 10 inches smaller than the bust and the hipline not more than 2 inches larger. If you have the same proportionate differences, with weight within 10 per cent of normal, you can rest assured that you have a beautiful figure whether or not your measurements tally with a given set for your height.

Candid Camera

She—Who else was there?

He—Well, John Blink——

She—Oh, did he have his new wife?

He—Yes.

She—Well, why on earth didn't you say so! What does she look like?

He—Oh, I don't know . . . she's a very nice woman.

She—Is she smart looking?

He—Yes, she seemed very intelligent——

She—Oh, that isn't what I mean! Does she wear her clothes well?

He—She seemed very neat appearing——

She—How old is she?

He—We-ll, she is a middle-aged woman—around 36—maybe 36½——

She—She'd have to be older than that—to have been a widow with a 16-year-old son. She probably wasn't married the first time until she was 25 . . . That would make her at least 41——

He—Well, she might be 37, but I wouldn't put her over that and I never go wrong on a woman's age.

She—Well, is she big or little?

He—I wouldn't say she was either—I guess she'd weigh around 125½.

She—I'll bet she's not an ounce under 140. Clothes are always deceptive. Is she a blonde?

He—We-ll, not exactly . . . But I wouldn't say she was a brunette.

She—Is she pretty?

He—I wouldn't exactly calf her pretty. She's a little too heavy in the ankles.

She—Men have such low minds. I'm talking about her face. What is it like?

He—Well, I—I didn't particularly notice.

She—You wouldn't. Is she tall or short?

He—Oh, I don't know—about the height of Mrs. Binn . . . or Mrs. Topper . . .

She—For heaven's sakes! Mrs. Binn is only 5 feet and Mrs. Topper is 5 feet 8, if she's an inch. Well, tell me this—what did she have on?

He—Oh, well, she looked very nice——

She—But what kind of clothes?

He—Oh, she was very conservatively dressed—nothing loud——

She—But WHAT was she wearing?

He—Oh, something dark—I believe . . .

She—Did she have on a corsage?

He—A what?

She—Did she wear any flowers?

He—I don't think so—say, maybe she did, too! I know there were a lot of women there with flowers.

She—Well, what kind of a hat did she have?

He—It was a very nice hat—a very conservative hat——

She—She sounds as if she hadn't a lick of style.

He—She's a very pleasant woman.

She—Well, maybe you can tell me this—what kind of a figure has she?

He—It's all right. Of course, she could stand about an inch off her hips——

She—Who couldn't? Well, what is she like personally?

He—I liked her very much. She has some very sound ideas.

She—Oh, what I mean is, what kind of a personality has she? Any charm? Any glamour?

He—Oh, yes! You know if you want my opinion I'd say she was an extremely sensible woman.

Schiaparelli Invents Colored, Hand-Knitted Stockings of Linen

THE LOCAL fashion group held a ninth anniversary luncheon here the other day, and inducted its new president, who is Julia Coburn, for a long time famous in the nation's fashion business. I'm proud to be a charter member of this gang of 1,000 women who work in the style racket, or allied journalism, or any branch of the "rag business," which is the inside name for these matters.

HUGHES

I was even a vice president for a year or so, or until the girls caught on to me, or something. It's a constantly inspiring crowd of women of all shapes and sizes, and it is strictly non-commercial in its activities, except that the monthly luncheons are great clearing houses for job gossip which is not profit-making in the strict sense of the word. Moreover, the group has allied gangs in various large cities and does a lot of good. At this birthday meeting the first president, Marian Taylor, got a great big hand.

The head speaker of the day was the beauteous Emmy Ives, fashion editor of one of the fancy slick-paper style magazines. She had just come back from Paris, where she peered intently at the mid-season clothes. Emmy said things in Paris are very stirring in war-time, what with the uniformed soldiers in town on leave and the general air of tense excitement. Of course, if the Germans decide to shower down in a big way when good weather arrives, you may not find our American girls going over to stare at new clothes.

Emmy commented on a wide variety of prints which we Americans dote on, and said that silhouettes are very slim, with the tiny waistline retained—if possible. Also, the demon Schiaparelli has come out with colored stockings of hand-knitted linen.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Not being an old-time joiner, I belong formally to only three things—this Fashion Group, the Women's National Press Club of Washington and, signing up only the other day, the Overseas Club. The last is made up of men and women who have reported matters over the water. I cracked the gate because I made three reportorial trips to Russia, one to Japan and Manchukuo, and got the last interview Comrade Trotsky gave out on the Island of Prinkipo. Not much of a record, but enough to bet by.

Naturally, many more boys than girls belong, but among the ladies on the club's roster are such variegated aces as Irene Kuhn, Mary Knight, Hortense McDonald and Dora Miller. I confess that my favorite professional men, based on the conversation they dish out, are (1) industrial designers and (2) foreign correspondents.

Church Honors 100-Year-Old Former Slave

Spirituals Sung As Tribute Is Paid To Oldest Member

"Everytime I feel the spirit moving . . ."

A chorus of pre-Civil War spirituals, sung with characteristic Negro religious fervor, launched a former colored slave on his second century of life.

"But I ain't willing to go yet," Alexander Willis told several hundred fellow members of the Vermont Avenue Baptist Church, gathered Tuesday night to honor his hundredth birthday anniversary, which fell on last Sunday.

Occupying a front seat of the meeting room following the regular weekly prayer session, Willis listened as the Rev. Chastine T. Murray, pastor, led a congregational tribute to him and his son, the late Rev. J. E. Willis, pastor there for 17 years.

Questioned by the clergyman about his family life, Willis recalled that he had been married thrice, was the father of 25 children by the first two wives, and none by the third. The hall rocked with laughter. Seven children are still alive, among them Amsteard Willis, who was present with his wife.

Later in the program, after receiving a check on behalf of the church from James E. Porter, chairman of the board of trustees, Willis arose to cut his birthday cake—adorned with one tiny candle. The cake was a gift of Mrs. Amanda Chase.

Willis' first quarter of life was spent on a plantation in Orange County, Va. He recalls having run away on many occasions, living in the woods for days on a diet of berries and nuts. He still bears scars on his back from beatings.

Many Lives of Poor Saved By D. C. Pneumonia Fund

How the philanthropy of a Washington widow has saved many lives from pneumonia was told yesterday for the first time in a prosaic report by Emergency Hospital.

Reviewing the record of the Parmelee Pneumonia Research Fund since its establishment at the hospital in December, 1938, Dr. Theodore J. Abernethy, clinical director, pointed out that it has meant the difference between life and death to 152 men, women and children.

Upon the recommendation of Dr. John Minor, chairman of the District Medical Society's public health committee and of the Health Department's pneumonia advisory council, Mrs. James Parmelee established the fund in memory of her husband, a former Cleveland industrialist and businessman. Mrs. Parmelee lives at 3029 Klingle road northwest.

With Dr. Minor serving as director of the fund, the pneumonia center at Emergency was, and still is, the only unit of its kind in a Washington hospital, devoted exclusively to the treatment of needy patients.

Since its foundation 15 months ago, said Dr. Abernethy, the fund has financed thorough treatment to 152 pneumonia patients, providing them with all necessary serums, drugs and diagnostic tests.

Dr. Minor pointed out that last winter, when most cases were treated with expensive serums, there is hardly any doubt that several needy patients would have died if this need had not been taken care of by the fund. One acutely ill colored laborer, for example, received serum valued at $200.

With only one paid employe—Miss Margaret McMahon, a technician—and volunteer services of Dr. Minor and Dr. Abernethy and the hospital staff, the pneumonia unit to date has made 1,327 blood chemistries, 768 red blood counts and hundreds of other tests in connection with case treatments.

The mortality rate, said Dr. Abernethy, has averaged 11 per cent, which he said is appreciably below the rate at the hospital during the two years before the fund was established.

3d Term or Not, Group Lays Inaugural Plan

One Republican, two Democrats and two New Deal Senators yesterday agreed to give a handsome inaugural to anyone who is elected President November 5.

The Senate District Committee, ignoring the third-term dispute and similar distractions, took only five minutes to report favorably three joint resolutions setting the stage for inaugural ceremonies January 20, 1941.

One resolution refers to the next Chief Executive as the "President-elect." Committee members gave no hint they had anyone in particular in mind.

The District Commissioners were authorized to spend up to $25,000 to erect first-aid and comfort stations, remove street car loading platforms and "maintain public order and life and property" in the District from January 15 to 26.

The resolutions also provide for quartering of troops in public buildings, issuance of licenses to sidewalk peddlers, wiring for special lighting effects and erection of stands.

Attending the session were Chairman King (Democrat), of Utah, and Senators Capper (Republican), of Kansas; McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada; Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, and Slattery (Democrat), of Illinois.

Six other measures were favorably reported by the committee. They exempt newsboys under 18 from unemployment insurance, forbid outdoor toilets on streets where sewer facilities are available, authorize the Commissioners to accept a memorial fountain from the Police Department, to be erected in the new municipal center, give garage repair bills a prior lien on automobiles being purchased on the installment plan, clarify one point in the District life insurance code of 1934 and change the name of an isolated block on Twenty-fourth street northwest, near Porter street, to Williamsburgh Lane.

'Ma' Williams Scores Hit Again With Another Thrift Shop Ball

50 of City's Fairest Girls Turn Out For Leap Year Dance at Sulgrave Club; Pasteboard Frogs Decorate Ballroom

By Carolyn Bell

With that uncanny knack of knowing how to please the public every time—a trait thought to be exclusive with Billy Rose—Mrs. John R. Williams, known to social Washington as "Ma," scored another hit last evening with her annual Thrift Shop ball.

In its gala "dress" of green and white, sprinkled lavishly with huge pasteboard frogs, the Sulgrave Club was the scene of perhaps the most successful charity ball in many a day. Proceeds of this leap year dance went to the Thrift Shop, an organization run for several children's charities, of which Mrs. Williams is chairman.

Fifty of the town's prettiest girls had donned their "leap year" costumes of short bouffant white skirts, wide puffed sleeves and Kelly-green aprons over all. They served on various committees to help see that guests had fun.

One of the high spots of the evening was the arrival of Mrs. Roosevelt around 11 o'clock. Met at the door by George Angus Garrett, the First Lady was escorted up the stairs by the floor committee. Holding back the ropes for this ceremony were the 22 leap year boys who wore frog-bedecked hats in deference to their titles, but otherwise were in conservative formal dress. Mrs. Roosevelt was greeted by Mrs. Williams and they chatted for quite some time, surrounded by the usual court, before Mrs. Roosevelt left.

The First Lady was smartly gowned in black crepe and tulle, fashioned with a very bouffant skirt of the tulle. From her shoulders fell a magnificent ermine stole. Tanned from her recent trip to Florida, she seemed "in the pink" of condition.

Onlookers received a thrill when the First Lady waltzed "The Blue Danube' with Mr. Garrett, who was the head of the floor committee.

Rooms Festooned With Green

In the receiving line with Mrs. Williams was Mrs. William J. Flather, wearing a chartreuse gown; Mrs. Joseph H. Himes, whose daughter, Marilynn, was whirling about the floor in her fetching "leap-year" garb; Mrs. Lewis C. Ecker, in a smartly cut champagne colored gowns; Mrs. Frederick A. Solgar, wearing a formal gown of red lame shot with silver; Miss Cecil Lester Jones, and Mrs. John S. Flannery. Mrs. Flannery looked smart in her gown of silver and white printed chiffon with a bouquet of freesias pinned to her ensemble.

Once upstairs guests wandered about looking up at the cleverly decorated rooms festooned with quantities of green leaves and Spanish moss. On either side of the milk and Coca-Cola bar were two huge pasteboard frogs, drinking milk. Tending this bar, were Mrs. Lauriston B. Hardin, Mrs. Rodgers Barker, Mrs. Gale McLean and Mrs. Jean de Sibour.

Even Orchestra Goes In for Wearin' of Green

Probably the most popular booths were the two large ones in the circular drawing room, one for horse racing and the other for shooting darts. Mrs. Eugene C. Carusi and Mrs. John F. Wilkins, jr., were busy as bees handling bets.

Guests were particularly amused at the huge green frogs bearing comical expressions, which decorated the ballroom. Sidney and his orchestra meekly donned bright green frock-coats and green bow ties to carry out the motiff. A white picket fence completely surrounded the orchestra.

Floor Show Well Received

Several dinner parties had been given before, the hosts and their guests coming on to the affair. Mr. and Mrs. John R. Caswell entertained at a party as did Miss Helen de Limur, daughter of the Attache of the French Embassy and Countess de Limur and Lady Leslie. Miss de Limur, who was one of the "Leap Year" girls, had as her guests for supper Miss Mary Wilson, Miss Alice Barry, Miss Nancy Glover, Jack Segar, Witcher Dunn, of California; Raymond Fox and Bob Parsons.

Shrouded in secrecy had been the plans for the floor show, which turned out to be excellent. Jimmie Mitchell had worked like mad over the plans and was pleased at the enthusiastic reception. There was the comedy team of Ward and Van, who brought down the house with their harp and violin act. They are currently playing in "Streets of Paris," at the National. A dance team from the Capitol Theater, Harris, Claire and Shannon, was good, as was Miss Katherine Hoyt, who sang several songs. The inimitable Jean Cathon, who is well known to Washingtonians who haunt the Club Versailles, sang several of his French ditties a la Maurice Chevalier.

Foursome of Nancys Reduced to Threesome

A foursome of Nancys were to have taken over the water pistol booth, but conspicuous by her absence was Mrs. William's granddaughter, Miss Nancy Leiter, who is sunning in Palm Meach, Fla. Others at the booth included Miss Nancy Luttrell, Miss Nancy Weller and Miss Nancy Ordway.

The Brazilian Ambassador and Mme. Martins were among the early arrivals, she gowned in a fetching paper-taffeta print. Later Mme. Martins was noted engaged in a smooth rhumba with Paulo Hasslocher, of the embassy.

Justice and Mrs. Stanley Reed stopped in, she in turquoise velvet; Mrs. John Allen Dougherty brightened up the event with a gown of lipstick red and Miss Eleanor Meem topped her leap-year gown with an Angora bolero.

Among those noted at the party were Mrs. Abbie McCammon, Mrs. John Allan Dougherty, Admiral and Mrs. George Pettengill, McKee Dunn, Nelson Perin, Mr. and Mrs. James Clement Dunn, Mrs. Blaise deSibour, Mrs. Richard Wilmer, Mrs. Frank C. Letts, Mr. and Mrs. Walter White, Mrs. Barry Mohun, Mrs. Reeve Lewis, Mrs. Harry Kerr, Chancey G. Parker, jr., Philip O. Coffin, Gen. and Mrs. Edwin M. Watson and Mr. and Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss.

About the Town with DUDLEY HARMON

Mrs. Francis Biddle's 'at Home' Uncrowded Because Invitations Limited Guests

GUESTS ARRIVING at Mrs. Francis Biddle's "at home" yesterday afternoon thought they had either the wrong day or the wrong apartment. There was no shriek of several hundred feminine voices and the calling cards on the silver tray didn't spill over onto the floor. This was all because the Solicitor General's wife sent out only enough cards so that her diningroom would be comfortably filled, instead of being "at home" to the city at large in the great Washington tradition for officialdom. Sitting at the tea table as we entered was Mrs. Truman Arnold, wearing a new spring hat of tiny pink carnations with her blue dress. When the subject of "at homes" came up, Mrs. Arnold frankly said she thought the big ones were nice. "They're in keeping with our spirit of democracy," she says, "and it's nice to think that a very excited heart is beating beneath the convention badge of the fat lady from the Middle West as she helps herself to her petit four from the buffet."

MRS. HENRY MORGENTHAU and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace were among the cabinet wives who dropped in. Mrs. Robert H. Jackson poured tea, while Mrs. Mark Merrill presided at coffee. Mr. Merrill, Mr. Biddle and Mr. Arnold were among the men present.

Mme. Fotitch, wife of the Yugoslav envoy, chatted with Miss Mary Winslow, head of the women's division of the Pan American Union. Others glimpsed were Mrs. John Biddle, Mrs. Stanley Reed, Mme. Bruggmann, wife of the Swiss Minister, and Mrs. Edward B. Meigs.

Mrs. Biddle, who as Katherine Garrison Chapin, is well known as a poet, wore a long black dress with a quaint white ruffle around the neck. She says that as her next writing venture she hopes to find time to do a poem to music which Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe (Mary Howe), Washington composer, has written.

NAVY SECRETARY Charles Edison will give his wife moral support by being present when she broadcasts over WMAL at 1:30 today. Interviewed by Pauline Frederick, Mrs. Edison will tell how she got off on the wrong foot as an official hostess in Washington by lingering on at an official dinner where she was the ranking guest. Completely forgetting that she ought to go home first, Mrs. Edison kept waiting for someone else to leave until the light dawned well after mianight.

THAT WELL-KNOWN SCHOLAR and wit, Dr. William Allan Neilson, former president of Smith College, has been in town for several days delighting the loyal hearts of fond Smith alumnae. So charming a man is he that the devotion of thousands of students to him has become almost legendary. Many stories have been told to illustrate his keen sense of humor, one of them centering about a group of Smith girls who came to him to protest because collegians at nearby Amherst had published in their magazine that Smith girls were easy to kiss.

"Don't worry," said President Neilson, "you may be easy to kiss, but always remember that gentlemen don't tell."

ADDRESSING A GATHERING the other evening, in which there were two men and 75 women, Dr. Neilson began "Gentlemen and ladies. I put the gentlemen first, as I have respect for minorities." Perhaps because of this he has been working since his retirement as co-chairman with Ernest Hemingway, of the American Committee for the Protection of Foreign Born. One of the aims of this group is to prevent unfair anti-alien legislation from being passed.

Dr. Neilson's rapt audience the other night included Mrs. Emory S. Land, Mrs. Howard Wilkinson, Mrs. John Howland and Mrs. Farrand Flower.

Mrs. Roosevelt Heads Sponsors For Ballet

Mrs. Roosevelt heads the list of sponsors for the Washington National Ballet, whose second program in its "Fridays at Nine" series will take place tomorrow at the Wardman Park Theater.

Tatiana Gnoocheff, whose engagement to Bernard Barton was recently announced, and Dawn Tagi will be soloists. The ballet by Dorothy Radde Emery, "Melodrama," which had its premiere last season, will be repeated.

Other sponsors include Justice and Mrs. William O. Douglas, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Draper, Mrs. George A. Garrett, Mrs. Dean Acheson, Mrs. Wayne Chatfield Taylor, Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Miss Ida Hoyt Chamberlain, Mrs. Conway Peyton Coe, Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Eliot, Mrs. Isabelle S. Farrington and Mrs. Edward R. Finkenstaedt.

House Daughters To Give Dance

The Daughters of the House have selected Friday, April 5, for a dinner dance at 8 o'clock at the Shoreham. Mrs. Eleanore Tolan is in charge of reservations and Miss Happy Izac will head the committee on decorations, which will carry out a spring motif.

The Wednesday luncheon, a bimonthly affair inaugurated last year, will be March 13 in the House of Representatives restaurant at the Capitol.

A Capella Choir To Give Concert Monday Night

Recent additions to the list of prominent Washington music lovers who will attend the concert of the Washington A Capella Choir Monday at 8:30 o'clock in Constitution Hall include Mrs. Charles McNary, Mrs. Bruce Barton, Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss, Mrs. Wayne Chatfield-Taylor, Mrs. Colgate W. Darden, Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, Mrs. Ralph Van Orsdel, Rabbi Gerstenfeld and Arthur Godfrey.

There will be one box taken by former members of the A Capella Choir who always attend the concert in compliment to their former choristers. This will be the ninth annual Lenten concert for this choir.

Among those who are assisting Mrs. Ruby Smith Stahl in completing arrangements for this event are Mrs. Walter Britt, Miss Joyce Soderstrom, Miss Mildred Padgett, Seth Peterson, Miss Marjorie Brett, Miss Amy McNally, Miss Alice Haines and Carl Nelson.

Miss Mina Druilhut To Speak on Greece

Miss Mina Druilhut, of the Greek Legation, will give an illustrated talk on Greece on Monday evening at McMahon Hall, of Catholic University. The lecture is under the auspices of the university's International Club.

Miss Druilhut will show 100 slides from the Metropolitan Museum, and will present five young ladies who will do Greek dances in peasant costumes.

Mrs. Greenbie Relates Anna Carroll's Feats

Author Describes Remarkable Woman Of Civil War Era, Her Power at Time, As Showing Need for Women's Archives

By Jessie Ash Arndt
The Post Club Editor

The question "Why women's archives?" was answered yesterday by Mrs. Marjorie Barstow Greenbie, the author, in a remarkable story she told at a luncheon given in her honor by Mrs. David Cushman Coyle. The luncheon, at the clubhouse of the American Association of University Women, had no connection with archives but Mrs. Greenbie's story did.

She told of the remarkable Civil War character, Anna Ella Carroll, on whom she has written a book, to be published by Whittlesy House next August. Probably you have heard of Ann Carroll—most persons have not. Mrs. Greenbie began delving into her history two years ago when she found her name listed in the Library of Congress as "The Great Unrecognized Member of Lincoln's Cabinet."

She recounted a few of the highlights of the career and here they are:

Anna Ella Carroll was born in 1815 at Kingston Manor, in an old house still standing on the tip of the Eastern Shore. Her father, Thomas King Carroll, became Governor when she was 14 and she went to Annapolis with him and acted as his secretary. When he returned to his plantation at the end of his term, he was financially burdened by the number of slaves he owned but was unwilling to sell them South. For ten years he worked on the problem, considering plans of colonization and finally sold his estate to a neighbor, with a majority of the field slaves. He kept only enough to work on a smaller plantation to which he moved, and divided the household slaves among his children.

Shocked Family By Going to Work

Anna, then 25, shocked her family by the announcement she was going to Baltimore to support herself and her servants. This she did and lived there as a fine lady, but at the same time, carried on what Mrs. Greenbie believes was one of the first public relations businesses ever conducted. She handled publicity for the East India Shipping enterprise and for railroad interests, and did lobbying.

She was a close friend of the Southerners in Washington. James Buchanan, elected President in 1856, was said by her family to have been her suitor, but she had a violent quarrel with him over vote trading among immigrants to keep the Southerners in power. The year of his election she had served as publicity director for the Know Nothing Party, and during his Presidency, although she was a White House belle, she acted as an astute infosmer to the other side.

After Abraham Lincoln was jockeyed into the nomination, Ann turned up, said Mrs. Greenbie, hand and glove with the inner council.

Knowing the intention of Maryland to secede from the Union and of the secessionists to take over Washington and the White House, she had the bright idea of suggesting that, if they held off, perhaps her father—still an influential figure—might join them.

Davis Promised Place to Father

There is a letter from Jefferson Davis asking that she use her great influence to persuade her father to do so and promising him a place in Davis' cabinet. By that time, Lincoln was in the White House, her purpose had been accomplished, and she replied "not for the whole South."

During the war she worked for the Government as Lincoln's personal pamphleteer, explaining the constitutional powers he could exercise in the emergency. She was sent West and did a spying job on Albert Sidney Johnston, Confederate general. In 1862, she proposed a military plan which she expected would be carried out that year. Had it been acted on promptly, the w: would have ended within the year, it is believed, but, although executed more slowly and with great loss, the plan followed was hers. It was she who selected Grant as the "little general in the West" to carry out the military operations.

An act was introduced in Congress to give her recognition and position commensurate with her service, but the assassination of Lincoln and subsequent events obscured it. The last attempt to secure such Congresional action was made by Senator Lodge, sr., Mrs. Greenbie said, a fact of special interest yesterday as Mrs. Henry Cabot Lodge, wife of the present Senator, was ranking guest at the luncheon.

Historians Ignored Her Power in Era

Mrs. Thomas F. McAllister, director of the Democratic National Committee, who was another guest, is also a member of the committee for the Women's Centennial Congress, to be held in New York next fall under the leadership of Mrs. Catt.

She plans to suggest that Mrs. Greenbie tell th story of Anna Carroll before that body and enlist its support for a movement to have her given belated recognition.

The case for women's archives is plain. Official letters and documents were easily available on this amazing woman—one of the most powerful figures of the Civil War period, yet historians have ignored her, although men of her day recognized her leadership. Historians to whom the documented manscript for Mrs. Greenbie's book was submitted before it was accepted for publication put thumbs down because they had never heard of Anna Carroll. But Mrs. Mary Beard, head of the World Center for Women's Archives, and her husband, Charles Beard, noted historian, and Carl Sandburg, had all known of Anna Carroll. Mr. Sandburg had considered writing a history of her himself until he learned that Mrs. Greenbie had done so. Their approval made right-of-way for her book.

Other luncheon guests yesterday were: Mrs. Ernest Gruening, wife of the Governor of Alaska; Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson, Mrs. Jerry Voorhis, Mrs. Thurman Arnold, Mrs. Robert Bruere, Mrs. James M. Helm, Mrs. Donald Richberg, Mrs. J. Fred Essary, Mrs. Charles C. Pynchon, Mrs. Edward C. Allen Calls For Action On Aged

Summons Meeting Of Welfare Heads Today to Outline Blue Plains Changes

Anxious to expedite efforts to remedy the deplorable conditions at the Blue Plains Home for the Aged and Infirm, Commissioner George E. Allen today will confer with health and welfare officials to decide how best to carry out the recommendations in a report on the institution, made public yesterday.

The report, which calls for the transfer of 69 inmates to other institutions, was written by Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, superintendent of Gallinger Hospital. Dr. Bocock made the following summary:

"In our medical survey of the 691 inmates of the Home for Aged and Infirm, we found conditions more closely approaching those described in the writing of Charles Dickens than the standards which should be applied to such a home in the Nation's Capital in the year 1940."

Meanwhile, Chairman D'Alesandro of the House District subcommittee investigating welfare institutions, completed his tour of the agencies yesterday with a trip to the Industrial Home School for Colored Children at Blue Plains. He said the general conditions at the institution were "favorable." He thought another building would be a great help.

While at the Blue Plains reservation he made a surprise visit to the Home for Aged. He was gratified that conditions, since his last visit, "were much improved."

"The inmates are being fed better, have more to eat and the meals are hot," he said.

He told Superintendent Frank B. Haskell to continue serving the better food although it cost an additional $500 a month.

Suggestions Listed

Meeting today with Commissioner Allen will be Welfare Director Robert E. Bondy; Dr. George C. Ruhland, health officer, and Dr. Bocock. The meeting was tentatively set for 11 a. m.

Specifically the report recommended:

That in addition to the five cases already sent to Gallinger, 14 more be transferred there at an early date for complete medical study. In addition there are 16 cases of chronic neurological diseases which should be referred to suitable hospitals within a reasonable period for complete examination, and later suitable disposition.

That consideration be given to the possible transfer of ten apparently psychotic inmates to a suitable institution if found committable by the appropriate agency, and that no further psychotic patients be admitted to the home.

That in the future the superintendent of the home and his medical officer be empowered to refuse acceptance from District hospitals of cases unsuitable for the home, and that admissions be limited to persons presenting the infirmities and diseases associated with old age plus a few incurable diseases which can be properly handled in the home.

Medical Worker Needed

That 21 feeple-minded inmates be considered for transfer to more suitable institutions and that further admissions of such cases be denied.

That consideration be given to the transfer of eight epileptic cases to a more suitable institution. If this is not possible, such cases should be segregated at the Home.

That immediate steps be taken to aid in the medical rehabilitation of a small groups of cases, largely orthopedic in nature, and that provision be made in the near future for more adequate treatment of eye cases and certain other cases which need clinical treatment. "We believe that a well trained medical social worker would be invaluable for the handling of such cases," the report said.

That all possible measures be taken to expedite the rehabilitation and discharge, through social service agencies, of all healthy individuals under 50 years of age.

A full-time medical officer; affiliated with a hospital in order that a visiting and consultant medical staff can be available; considerable increases in the nursing and attendant staff; purchase of complete medical equipment for the diagnosis and treatment of the aged, and enough surgical equipment to provide for minor surgical emergencies; purchase of two additional vehicles for the transportation of patients to clinics; and the appropriation of a fund for the purchase of glasses, false teeth, orthopedic appliances, adequate drugs and medical supplies.

Dr. Bocock said his three assistants, who aided in the survey, inquired as to the requirements for admission into the home before beginning the medical survey. He said:

"It was surprising to find that Blue Plains is not only a home for the aged and those suffering from the infirmaties of old age, but also a place of last resort for almost all classes of the unfortunate of the District. The only strict requirement of those who enter is that they be indigent. As a result, the institution has become not only a refuge for the aged, but also a home for the feeble-minded, the epileptic, the nonviolent insane, deaf mutes, the blind, the incurable of all ages, a convalescent home for different disease, a shelter for prisoners released from jails and reformatories who cannot find work and for normal healthy men in their fifties who likewise cannot find work."

He said no attempt is made to segregate these various groups.

Commissioner Allen was responsible for the survey and is determined to better conditions at the institution as soon as possible, he said yesterday.

D'Alesandro, who undertook to investigate the welfare institutions, after Mrs. Roosevelt called the home "depressing," will complete his report within a very few days.

Thieves Prey On Worshiper And Doctor

Purse, Wallet Stolen In Church, Hospital; 2 Groceries Held Up

After almost 48 crime-free hours, Washington's wave of lawlessness resumed yesterday and engulfed a church and a hospital.

All chances for a crimeless 48 hours were shattered when a 30-year-old colored man held up Evelyn Dorfman in her grocery at 1426 New Jersey avenue northwest and rifled the cash register of $10 to $12. He held one hand in a pocket as if concealing a weapon.

Two colored men, one with a revolver, held up Norman Katz, clerk in a grocery store at 938 N street northwest. They robbed the register of $6 to $10, and explored Katz's pockets without reward. While they were making their exit, two customers entered and were herded against a wall.

At St. Anthony's Church, Twelfth and Monroe streets northeast, Esther Rohlader, of 1003 Girard street, left her purse hanging for a few minutes on a choir rail during devotions. When she returned it was gone, with the $17 it contained.

Dr. M. McKindle Boyer, of Howard Chapel drive, Maryland, lost $82 when his wallet was removed from his coat while he was performing an operation at Sibley Hospital. He told police the coat was left in a seventh floor locker.

Meanwhile, police were informed the reward for the murderer of Herman Sirkis, northeast liquor dealer, would be increased from $300 to $700.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Hans Kindler conducts the National Symphony Orchestra Wednesday night in Constitution Hall with Marjorie Lawrence as soprano soloist. Program: "Leonore" Overture No. 3 (Beethoven), Sinfonia No. 10 (Manfredini), "Il est doux" from "Herodiade" (Massenet), "Le Rouet d'Omphale" (Saint-Saens), Waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier," Finale of "Salome" (Richard Strauss).

Thanks to the manner in which the program was put together and to the admirable collaboration of all who participated in the performance, last evening's concert of the National Symphony Orchestra achieved the perfect climax of which conductors dream. The problem of raising the emotional tension by cumulative degrees which carries an audience to the crest of enthusiasm with the concluding work was solved by the singing of Marjorie Lawrence, the conducting of Hans Kindler and the playing of the orchestra in the finale from Richard Strauss' "Salome." All that had gone before was but the preliminary ascent to a resplendent summit.

The difficulties of this score—the exacting demands it makes upon the singer who has no cues for the vocal line, upon the conductor who has a mass of instrumentation to thread, and upon the players who must be alert to their last resource of skill—are evident to any listener. Not so patent is the esprit de corps which made this performance so unified and so electrifying that it was a personal triumph for everyone concerned in it.

Miss Lawrence read her part with a dramatic intensity and a vocal power that left little to be desired, and that little was the scenic investure that would have focused the psychological factors. Her conception of the perverse character animated her interpretation to a point of vivid projection, and she sang with a range of dynamics that colored the vocal line with subtleties of emotion. Her achievement was the more remarkable because she had been disappointing in the aria, "Il est doux, il est bon;" from Massenet's "Herodiade." But perhaps she had planned that very effect, for Massenet's Salome is a simpering innocent in comparison with the Salome of Strauss and Wilde.

Dr. Kindler began the concert with a finished and satisfying performance of Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture. This was followed by the revival of a work placed in the orchestra's repertoire some time ago, the Sinfonia No. 10 in E minor by Francesco Manfredini, an Italian contemporary of Bach. No individual qualities stand out in this music, which observes the patterns of early eighteenth century style with a pleasant fluency.

Other items on the program were the adroit symphonic poem of Saint-Saens, "Le Rouet d'Omphale," which shows how much he learned from Liszt about scoring for descriptive purposes, and the richly harmonized waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier," which revealed that Richard Strauss was as much a master of consonance and seductive melody as of cacophony and horripilant leit-motifs.

Struck by Taxi, D. C. Boy, 5, Seriously Hurt

Coroner's Jury Orders Two Drivers Held In Recent Fatalities

A five-year-old boy was hurt seriously by a taxicab last night. He is James Shaddock, of 650 Sixth street northeast.

James was hit on Sixth street between F and G streets northeast. At Casualty Hospital he was reported suffering a fracture of the left thigh and head injuries.

Police said driver of the cab was Henry J. Grange, 43, 821 L street northeast.

Earlier yesterday two motorists were ordered held for prosecution by a coroner's jury after inquests into two recent traffic fatalities.

Matthew J. Butler, 24, of 61A L street southeast, was found responsible by the jury in the death of Taft Jack Moy, colored, 28, of 403 L street southeast. He was held for grand jury action.

It was testified that Butler's automobile struck Moy while he was crossing Eleventh street southeast in the 1200 block February 12.

In the second case, Lewis F. Hunter, 23, of 710 Quincy street northwest, was found negligent by the jury and ordered held under the negligent homicide act. He will be tried at Police Court. Hunter was the driver of an automobile which overturned a truck at Tenth and F streets northeast, in a collision February 26. The truck driver, James Powell, colored, 22, of 4700 Benning road northeast, was killed.

Capital News In Brief

Problem to Duck

Uncle Sam wants to find out if ducks know their way around. It looks like a dirty trick on the ducks.

Twelve pintails, banded in gold, will be released here tomorrow, by no less a personage than Secretary Ickes, and the Government ornithologists will sit back and wait to see what they will do. The gag is that these ducks are from the West Coast, flown here by plane.

The Biological Survey already knows ducks in their migrations follow certain fairly definite "flyways," Atlantic, Central, Mississippi and Pacific. Now it wants to see if these dozen ducks will cruise up and down the Atlantic or will quack indignantly and fly back to the Coast.

It's all part of National Wild Life Restoration Week March 17-23.

Friendship Citizens Seek Zone Revision

Permit for Store Adjacent to School Arouses Protests

An amendment to the zoning law that would give residents of a community the power to prevent the rezoning of any tract of land within five blocks of their homes was urged last night by the Friendship Citizens Association.

The resolution grew out of the citizens' protests over the recent rezoning of a 2½-acre tract opposite the Janney School at Wisconsin avenue and Albemarle street northwest, to permit the erection of a Sears, Roebuck & Co. store.

The association also voted to join with other interested organizations in a petition for a rezoning of the rezoned property from commercial, the status assigned it by the zoning commission February 17, to residential, its original status.

Most of the 50 members present at the meeting, held in the Janney School, signed an open letter to the newspapers read by Mrs. Esther G. Crews, which charged that "the sentiment of property owners is a phrase bandied about by the guardians of our District, and used to suit their own purposes."

The letter cited a phrase used by the Zoning Commission in rejecting the citizens' appeal for a rehearing, that "the sentiment of a neighborhood is not a controlling factor" in a zoning case.

The following committee was appointed to represent the association before the Zoning Commission: J. J. Slattery, Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Tucker, John T. Dawson, R. C. Hurley, Mrs. J. D. Richardson, Mrs. Paul Kayser and F. X. Callahan.

The association indorsed the House resolution appointing a select committee to investigate the activities of small-loan companies in the District, and indorsed the conduct of Thomas E. Lodge as a member of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board. Thomas J. Maher volunteered to head a committee to carry on the Metropolitan Police Boys Club drive in hte Friendship area.

School Board Maps Child Actor Fight

Objections Listed By Ballou Against Move to Annul Stage Age Limits

The Board of Education yesterday prepared to take action on the proposed District child labor law amendment, as Supt. F. W. Ballou listed objections advanced against the bill, which would open stage doors to children of any age.

Since the bill is on the calendar of the House, Dr. Ballou said "it would be futile to try to hold up the legislative machinery of the House" by any action which the board may take at present.

On his advice that the board be ready to act when the Senate District Committee considers such legislation, the board voted to ask its own legislative committee to recommend what its action should be.

The board also authorized Dr. Ballou to confer with Representative Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, chairman of the House District Committee, who introduced the bill.

For the board meeting yesterday Dr. Ballou prepared memoranda of objections which have come to his attention, in regard to the new bill, which, he said, "is scheduled to come up for passage on the next District day Monday" in the House. These included:

No minimum age is provided, which means that a child of any age may be used in theatrical productions.

The provision authorizing a 28-hour week of four hours daily will permit employment on seven days a week and will authorize the appearance of minors in four one-hour vaudeville shows daily.

The bill makes the Board of Education a censor of theatrical productions and limits its activities to the reading of the play in advance of its production.

It would be difficult, even impossible, for the Board of Education to satisfy itself that the minor is receiving adequate educational instruction under the provisions of the bill. This would likewise be true with respect to determining whether the parent or guardian had made satisfactory provision for safeguarding the health and morals of the minor.

The board voted yesterday to urge that plans of the proposed new Sears-Roebuck Building be drawn so that the entrance will constitute the least possible hazard to the pupils of nearby Janney School, at Wisconsin avenue and Albemarle street northwest.

The board decided to forward to the District Commissioners a request that items for the purchase of site and construction of an elementary school in the vicinity of Minnesota avenue and Ely place southeast be included in the next deficiency bill.

Gratz E. Dunkum, chairman of the board's finance committee, presented a statement that about 30 family units of the low-priced dwelling project in that vicinity will be finished by next September. The elementary school, which is sought, would take the place of two portables now located in that vicinity. According to the estimates prepared by the Board of Education, the school would be an eight-room $174,800 building.

The board protested the issuance of a Class A liquor license transfer at 5100 Conduit road northwest. It also reaffirmed opposition to renewal of a Class B license at 200 P street northwest, near Armstrong High School.

2 Children Missing

Harvey V. Prentice, superintendent of the Gospel Mission, 214 John Marshall place northwest, reported to police last night his daughters, Jean, 15, and Ruth, 4, left home at 3 p. m. and had not returned. Eight hours after leaving they still were missing.

Prentice said Jean often went on afternoon hikes but never before had taken her younger sister. Jean, he said, wore her dark hair in long braids, while Ruth has light curly hair.

Weather Man at Sea

Scientists Tell of Gathering Some Data and Mal de Mer

Spent Month on Cutter in Midocean To Gather Reports Sent by Merchant Vessels in Peace, Now Halted by War

Three Weather Bureau scientists returned to Washington yesterday after pioneering a month in mid-Atlantic to restore the flow of necessary weather information cut off by the war.

They were C. J. MacGregor, Arctic explorer and meteorologist, and Harland Richards and William B. Chappell, observers.

The trio told yesterday, in an interview at the Agriculture Department, how they spent 21 stormy days aboard the 327-foot Coast Guard cutter Bibb, and sent back daily reports on weather conditions from a point 1,100 miles east of Norfolk, Va.

They sailed out of Norfolk February 6, said MacGregor, ran straight into a hurricane with 80-mile winds, and afterward had only two days of calm. Ninety per cent of the crew were sea sick, after thinking the weather assignment would be light work after ice patrol duty.

Despite "terrific winds" and seasickness, MacGregor said the crew of 125 cooperated "100 per cent" in making the weather observations under difficult conditions.

Main instrument for obtaining the weather reports was the "radiosonde," 2-pound radio transmitter sent up by helium-filled balloons to determine temperature, pressure and humidity in the upper air, and transmit them to the ship. It took ten men to handle the 5-foot balloons in the high winds, said MacGregor.

When used on land, the radio instruments are equipped with parachutes to bring them down safely after the carrier balloons burst in the upper air. Each instrument carries a reward notice, offering $1, $5 and $20 prizes for safe return. Out at sea, the weather men abandoned hope of recovering the radios, and sent the $15 instruments aloft without parachutes.

MacGregor said that their only visitors in midocean were a couple of ships, which passed in the distance, three whales, two porpoises, two turtles, and the Atlantic Clipper planes whose lights could be seen passing at night on the Bermuda-Azores run.

Five hundred miles farther East of their ship was the cutter Duane, with a similar weather crew.

MacGregor explained that their ship was painted white, and searchlights played on the American flag at night, to eliminate danger from war vessels.

The floating weather stations, authorized by President Roosevelt, furnished information needed in mapping weather along the Atlantic coast and at sea, officials explained. With the outbreak of war, ships of most nations stopped sending weather reports, and the Bureau had been crippled in its reports to oceangoing planes and ships.

Francis W. Reichelderfer, chief of the Weather Bureau, said the new service would be necessary for the duration of the war.

600 Employes Of PWA Face Furloughing

Public Works Administration officials announced last night they would proceed with the furloughing of 200 Washington employes, although union groups were requesting the terminations be delayed until employes could gain civil service status after passage of the Ramspeck bill.

Officials said notices would be placed on 200 employes' desks within a few days announcing the dismissals effective March 21. They estimated another 200 local workers would be given notice of furloughing at the end of the month and another 200 would have to be dropped before July 1, the end of the fiscal year.

The terminations are necessitated, it was explained, by the PWA's plan to wind up operations.

Meantime, representatives of the United Federal Workers Union have requested PWA Administrator Clark to delay giving notice of terminations until employes should have used up their accrued leave. By that time, union officials estimated, the Ramspeck civil service extension bill might have been written into law and the employes would have gained classified status, enabling them to be transferred to other Government jobs.

Couple Burned In Apartment Fire On 18th Street

Two persons were burned last night in a fire in their fourth-floor apartment at 1809 Eighteenth street northwest, shortly after they had retired.

William and Lottie Keenan, each 65, were taken to Freedman's Hospital with burns on the face, arm and chest. Late last night they were still unconscious.

Firemen found them on the floor. The origin of the fire was undetermined. Damage was estimated at $800.

Ahepa Gives Turkey $2,000 For Relief

A delegation from the Supreme Lodge of the Order of Ahepa yesterday presented a $2,000 check for relief of earthquake victims to the Ambassador of Turkey, Mehmet Munir Ertegun. They were introduced by Kimon Diamantopoulos, Minister of Greece.

V. I. Chebithes, supreme president of Ahepa, in presenting the check, which was voted at a meeting yesterday, said the order "has donated this check to the victims of the earthquake as a token of friendly relations between the United States on the one hand, and Turkey and Greece on the other."

In accepting the donation, Ertegun assured the delegation of cordial relations between his country and the United States. As for "your country and mine," he added, "they are trying hard for the preservation of peace at that part of the world and I hope they will succeed."

Besides Chebithes, the delegation included Van A. Nomikos, John G. Zazas, Louis P. Maniatis, C. G. Economou, George Papaeleas and George Loucas. The Supreme Lodge was received yesterday afternoon by President Roosevelt.

Inhabitants Attack View Of Wender

Society Protests 'Mess of Pottage' Remark About U. S. Contribution to D. C.

The Association of Oldest Inhabitants last night attacked testimony of Harry S. Wender, first vice president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, before a House subcommittee Tuesday offering to exchange the Federal contribution to the District for local enfranchisement.

Named to a committee who will frame a protest to be presented to the House subcommittee on District reorganization were Jesse Suter, chairman; John B. Dickman, sr., and Harry A. Burr.

Suter, a delegate to the federation from the Society of Natives, scored Wender's statement characterizing the $6,000,000 Federal contribution as a "mess of pottage" and as contravening "fiscal equity" in Washington.

He pointed out that to "dump the $6,000,000 in the Potomac" would automatically raise per capita taxes at least $10.

Suter declared discontinuance of the Federal Government's sharing of the District tax burden would be unconstitutional and would substitute a "bogus birthright" for Washington's "real birthright."

Before the business session, Philip W. Nicholson, 78-year-old former deputy chief of the District Fire Department, presented to the association the ancient leather helmet and belt he used from the commencement of his career in 1883.

Nicholson said he wore the helmet until metal headgear supplanted the leather type in 1923, during years of service that included duty at all of Washington's biggest fires until his retirement in 1931.

Col. Francis Scott Key-Smith, direct descendant of the author of the National Anthem, described the career of George Washington.

Lunts an April Date In New Sherwood Play

'Revelation' at National Week of April 22; President's Birthday Celebrations Broke Records; This, That and the Other About the Theater

"REVELATION," Robert E. Sherwood's first play since his last Pulitzer Prize winner, "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," will be seen at the National Theater the week of Monday, April 22, with Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne starred. It will have its world premiere in Providence, R. I., on March 29, play two weeks at the Colonial Theater, in Boston, and one at Ford's, in Baltimore, before unfurling itself in the National Capital.

BELL

The supporting cast, recruited largely from the Lunts' established acting company, will include Richard Whorf, "the bum in the box" in "The Taming of the Shrew;" Sydney Greenstreet, Edward Raquello, Montgomery Clift, Phyllis Thaxter and Elizabeth Fraser, to mention only a few.

Mr. Lunt is staging "Revelation" for the Playwrights' Company and the Theater Guild. Richard Whorf has designed the three stage settings. The scene of the play is Helsinki—timely enough, as such things go—and the action covers a period of 20 months beginning in October, 1938, and continuing through this spring. The new Sherwood play will open in the Alvin Theater, New York, April 29, immediately following the local engagement.

Universal has announced the signing of two old-timers for Bing Crosby's new picture, "If I Had My Way." They are Blanche Ring and Eddie Leonard. The so-called "present generation" of theatergoers haven't seen too much of Blanche Ring of recent years, but the old-timers among the audience will recall with joy her appearance with the late Frank Daniels as long ago as "Sergeant Brue." It was in that musical comedy that she, as a featured singer—much like Carmen Miranda in "The Streets of Paris," now at the National—introduced those ancient hits, "Dearie" and "Rings on My Fingers." Eddie Leonard was here not so long ago to revive his "wah-wah-wah" style of singing in "Ida" and "Boo-Loo Eyes" and tear off a little more of his incomparable soft-shoe dancing. At the Earle, I think it was.

Washington went magnificently over the top for the 1940 celebration of the President's Birthday. The net receipts ran about 12 per cent above those of any previous year. Maj. James R. Lusby, comptroller of the general committee, headed by Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, reports $52,364.08 in the till, with an approximate $10,000 still to come from Commissioner Allen's "March of Dimes." The "command performance" of "Life With Father," at the National, turned in a net of $3,529, including Mrs. Roosevelt's check for $25 for her seat in the Presidential box on that memorable Sabbath evening. The midnight shows at the Capitol and Earle Theaters ran up $6,203, with $3,835.72 from the F street house and $2,376.70 from the Warners' top house. Both played to capacity, but the Capitol seats approximately 1,000 more customers than the Earle. Nice going is what I always say.

Dots and Dashes

Frank Lloyd, one of the foremost of Hollywood's motion picture directors, whose last contribution to the screen was "Rulers of the Sea," has completed arrangements to bring his entire cast and producing unit to Williamsburg, Va., for several weeks of shooting on "The Tree of Liberty," for Columbia Pictures . . . Cary Grant and Joan Fontaine head the cast . . . So near at hand, this should prove a great impetus toward Washington pilgrimages to Williamsburg to see how pictures really are made . . . And to that high-strung Southern gentleman, Sam Galanty, of Columbia, thanks for the kindly post-vacation note . . . Next year let's switch the whole thing, Sam . . . You go to bed for three weeks and I'll go to Miami, Hollywood, Havana, or wherever it was . . . The cost is about the same, bottle for blonde and dollar for doll . . . After the Variety Club's testimonial dinner to Judge Andrew R. Kelley tomorrow night at the Willard, Ray Bell, loquacious Loewite, will be poured on a midnight train for Hollywood to receive the industry's citation as the best motion picture publicist in the United States—or one of them . . . We used to be pretty good ourself—even if we do say it, who shouldn't . . . But in those days it was every man for himself, with no national organizations passing out largesse . . . Heigho . . . So Dick Maney, head and shoulders of the exploitation racket in New York, drops by in behalf of Gladys George in "Lady in Waiting" . . . Dick has three plays in rehearsal in New York, and all have been held up by the illness of their stars with flu . . . You're telling me! . . . Brock Pemberton had the worst time . . . All he had was pneumonia, pleurisy and a battle with the results of a new sort of treatment that poisoned him . . . But he is pulling through—probably what he thinks is a knothole . . . Thursday being normally the busiest day of the week on this desk, all they have scheduled in addition is the screening of Cecil B. DeMille's "Land of Liberty" and the WJSV 50,000 watts celebration . . . A few more hours in the day, please . . . and a few more days in the week!

Hollywood, March 6.

It took a ghost walking in the shadow of the Academy Award dinner to awaken Hollywood to the fact that the living enjoy things more than the dead. The ghost was Douglas Fairbanks, sr. The day after the dinner more people received flowers from unexpected sources. When the Oscar was handed to Doug, jr., as a memento because his father helped found and was the first president of the Academy—there wasn't one among those 1,500 present who didn't remember someone they had forgotten and said, "I must do something about them tomorrow." Many of them did. We had 12 years in which to reward Douglas but never thought it it till he passed on.

Norma Shearer, in a blue embroidered satin cut princess and corseted without straps over the shoulders, which was very unbecoming because Norma's shoulders are too athletic . . . Joan Bennett, in white chiffon, with a turban to match—with a huge diamond sunburst in front . . . Greer Garson also in white . . . And one of the prettiest girls there was Kay Aldrich in gray chiffon with a robe that looked like a nun's costume. And Judy Garland's blue corded chiffon had the young generation all a-dither.

I haven't spent more than three weeks of the last eight months with her."

ARMAND DENIS and Leila Roosevelt recently returned from their Near East expedition, where they had sought material for their new travel-film . . . In Calcutta they were introduced to a young princess who, they learned, is the daughter of the Maharajah of Nepal. "We're seeing him next week," said Denis, "and we'll give him your regards" . . . A few days later they met the fabulous Maharajah of Nepal. "I have regards for you, from your daughter in Calcutta," Denis began . . . The Maharajah seemed puzzled, turned to his entourage, and questioned them . . . "You mean you don't know about your child in Calcutta?" asked Denis . . . "The Maharajah," explained the ruler's aide, "has 40 daughters and 68 sons."

JULES LEVENTHAL, the producer who has helped J. B. Priestley's "When We Are Married" to survive, at one time had as many as 25 stock companies working in small cities throughout America. Twelve years ago, when Clifford Odets was an actor, he went to Leventhal, confessed that he needed a job—and was offered one, for $35 a week, in a theater in Union City, N. J. . . . "But I can't do it, on $35 a week," Odets protested. "How'll I live?" . . . "Woderfully," the producer assured him. "Union City is a very nice quiet place. The people are nice there. And with $35 a week, you'll live comfortable, without any headaches, no worries—it's the ideal way to live" . . . Odets met Leventhal again last night. "It took me 12 years to find out," Odets confessed, "that you're right."

TRUMAN TALLEY, head of Fox Movietone News, returned from a European trip last week . . . He visited the Maginot Line for one week and there received not only a silver medallion commemorating his trip, but also a gold bracelet, on which was inscribed his name and address . . . "This certainly is a nice gesture," Tally acknowledged. "This love-bracelet, with my name and address on it . . . it's so nice of you" . . . "But it's the customary thing," Talley was assured, "so that in case your arm is blown off, the finder will know where to send it."

Billy Livingston, whose name once was linked with Brenda Frazier's, will be master-of-ceremonies at the new Royal Palms Club on Broadway . . . Gallup finally has taken a poll on the question: "Would you vote for Roosevelt if he runs again?" It was taken three weeks ago, and isn't being released yet. The replies are said to have been 62 per cent pro.

GEORGE WHITE visited the Beachcombers Bar, before starting his cross-country trip as advance-man for his touring Scandals . . . There he sought proprietor Monte Proser's advice on publicity—inasmuch as Proser once was a prominent press-agent. "Oh, well, I don't expect any trouble at all," White declared. "After all, I've been in this business for 30 years. All I have to do is give the editors photos of my girls, and they'll use it to announce my Scandals. It's so simple" . . . Proser offered some advice, but White persisted: "With all my years of experience it should be a cinch. I'll just give 'em the pictures of my girls" . . . He made his farewells and left. An hour later, White was back in the club, for a package he had left there. "I forgot," he explained, "to take the pictures."

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, March 5 (INS).—The rumors that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer would discipline Lana Turner after her sudden elopement and marriage to Arthur Shaw is apparently without foundation. The talk was, at the time their promising glamour girl married, that she would be dropped like a hot potato, but that is just Hollywood gossip. Lana will be costarred with Lew Ayres in "To Own the World," a Dalton Trumbo story. He is the author of the widely publicized book, "Johnny Got His Gun" and this is also a tragic story.

LOUELLA PARSONS

The new Mrs. Shaw will have a chance to really emote, for the Trumbo yarn is replete with heavy dramatic situations. She was costarred with Lew Ayres once before in a "Dr. Kildare" picture and there is talk that M-G-M may continue to team them, believing that the old-time idea of pairing young stars is good box office.

Thomas Mitchell went to New York for a holiday, happy as a lark over receiving the Academy Award for the best male supporting role. When he comes back, he'll get another break with John Ford in "The Long Voyage Home," which John is making for Argosy pictures at the Walter Wanger Studios. Interesting, too, that John Wayne, who was also in "Stagecoach," will be teamed with Mitchell and the two of them will play sailors. You can save your money right now to see that picture for, take it from me, it will be good. Dudley Nichols, who did such a swell job on "Stagecoach" will be with John again on the writing end.

Gloria Dickson yesterday said that she would seek her freedom from Perc Westmore, the well-known makeup artist. I am sorry to hear that, for I had hoped they would reconcile. Gloria felt aggrieved over Perc's confirmation of the story that she was lost, I don't think she should have, for he was greatly worried and she could easily have told him her whereabouts. Gloria checked in at Paramount for one of the roles in "I Want A Divorce" with Joan Blondell and Dick Powell. The title, I am sorry to say, is probably prophetic.

Among them were Norma Shearer and George Raft, Ronald Colman and his wife, the Spencer Tracys, Pat Paterson and Charles Boyer—all of them coming in from the "Too Many Husbands" preview; Pat Ellis and Lon Reese, local hotel man, are keeping the telephones busy.

Sugar Geise, who last week was reported eloping with Jackie Coogan, at the Club Seventeen with John Hart; Pat Dane, who was Rudy Vallee's last month's flame, dining tete-a-tete with Allan Gordon at Sardi's; Ernst Lubitsch moves into the former Mary Pickford offices at United Artists; Walter Kane's first anniversary gift to his bride, Lynn Bari, a square cut aquamarine ring surrounded by rubies and diamonds; Bob Hope hosted a house-warming for his seven pooches and their friends at his new place in the Valley.

The Federal Diary:

Civil Service May Revise Technique of Examinations

Representative of Agency Doing Hiring May Sit With Commission Personnel In Making Tests of Applicants for Jobs

By Alfred Friendly

The Civil Service Commission is considering wider use of a new examination method that may revolutionize its testing technique.

The new system probably will be given a thorough workout in the field of Federal information officer, or press man. It is a category of employment where the commission's previous examinations were conceded to have been notorious failures.

Used Seldom in Past

The new examinations, now being prepared, contemplate that a representative of the department or agency doing the hiring will sit in with the commission examiners at oral tests of the applicants.

This plan has been used only a few times by the commission. Failure of the commission in the past to include agency representatives in the panel of examiners has caused much of the criticism of the commission's examination methods.

In the tests for press officers, the preliminary ratings will be based on evidence which the candidates will be asked to submit about their education and experience.

After an initial elimination has been made on this basis the remaining applicants will be divided among the various options set up—such as agriculture, labor, economics, finance and several scientific branches—and will be interviewed individually by a commission examiner and by a representative of one or more departments interested in hiring an information officer in a specific field.

Provides Complete Picture

The purpose of the oral examination will be to judge an applicant's qualifications in terms of personality, background and competence in the subject matter and general approach to the work. In other words, it serves to provide an employing officer with a picture of an applicant far more complete than would a mere written examination.

For the top position in the examination, information officer at a salary of $5,600—still a third testing process will be used. This will consist of an oral examination by a committee of three—a representative of the hiring department, a civil service examiner and an outside newspaperman of unquestioned distinction in the particular optional field being tested.

It was learned at the commission that this system will be used in future as often as possible for all types of Federal jobs in the higher and more important brackets.

Last Tests Denounced

The last two examinations for information officers given by the commission were roundly denounced by information experts already in the Federal service, and by outside newsmen. Both were distinguished by the fact that the examining and the grading done almost exclusively by the commission, although the agencies concerned had a hand in drafting the test.

The first, which was to establish a register of information specialists for the Social Security Board, produced a list of eligibles which other Government press officers refused to use. The second, for the wage and hour division, was so drawn up as to fail one of the most distinguished collections of newspaper writers ever assembled outside the roster of Pulitzer prize winners.

The Federal Diary has had occasion more than once to express distaste for a habit prevalent among social workers, "management" experts and the learned professions. It is the use of fancy words for the sheer joy of their sound.

Personnel officers, it now appears, are making a bid of their own for the honor of creating the flossiest masterpiece of high-priced verbiage. They have requested the Civil Service Commission to hold an examination for "personnelist." The accent, just to show that the Diary can break out a fancy word on its own account, is on the antepenultimate syllable.

Little

Like an H. G. Wells forecast in terrifying reality, "The Lion Has Wings" is an avowedly propaganda film, at once ugly and fascinating. Made through the cooperation of the Royal Air Force, the Alexander Gorda production opened yesterday at the Little Theater.

No matter how much one may wish England to win the war against Hitlerism, this film is a disturbing experience, a grim ultimatum that in wartime intelligence goes on the shelf while life is disorganized for a parade of destruction. Factories turn out death missiles; the triumphs of life become the deatns of others. Smiling Englishmen and grim-faced Nazis reflect the disease of civilization.

"The Lion Has Wings" is presented not only for its unquestionably interesting picture of how the war is being waged, but as an example of propaganda. One can only be thankful that here we are able to analyze its approach rather than be influenced by it.

Noncomparative things are compared. All Nazis goosestep; they have none of the traditional sports of the English. Death, when it comes to the flying English, come gloriously and off screen; but the Grim Reaper sends the taut-faced Nazi plummeting earthwards in his airplane in full view of the camera.

The details of modern war making are strikingly revealed. The amazing central control room from which all fighting planes are directed, where it is possible to listen by radio to a sky battle hundreds of miles away, and the R. A. F. in action over the Kiel Canal are tied together in a slim story which only years of future suffering can possibly conclude. Lowell Thomas voices the preliminary narration. Ralph Richardson, Merle Oberon and June Duprez are the "names" in a cast drawn from England's fighters.

Union Mission Plans to Double Bed Capacity

Campaign Committee Of 55 Appointed To Raise $100,000

More than twice as many homeless men will be cared for by the Central Union Mission through its proposed $100,000 annex, for which a campaign committee of 55 members was announced Tuesday.

W. W. Everett, general chairman of the campaign, named the membership of the advance gifts committee, whose work will precede the opening of the city-wide campaign.

The proposed building will provide 110 free beds, to be added to the 88 now available. The building, to be called the John S. Bennett Memorial Annex, also will supply more space for children needing temporary care in the Children's Emergency Home at the mission.

Clifford Johnson, director of the campaign, said more accommodations at the mission would help to keep down a crime increase in Washington, "because when a man is alloted a bed for the night at the mission, he has to stay indoors to keep it and thus he is out of mischief."

The five groups of the advance gifts committee include:

Group 1—Col. E. Goring Bliss, chairman; W. W. Everett, Z. D. Blackistone, Harold A. Brooks, Walter T. Lawton, W. P. McCracken, jr., Charles A. Robinson, P. L. Rogers, E. R. Troxel, James B. Edmunds and H. B. Stabler.

Group 2—Leonard W. De Gast, chairman; L. E. Breuninger, L. T. Breuninger, Maj. E. W. Brown, Paul B. Cromelin, Harry Hoskinson, Nathaniel Montford, W. O. Grapes, William N. Payne and Dr. Charles E. Resser.

Group 3—Walter K. Handy, chairman; Arthur O. Bishop, Daniel Dollarhide, Page Etchison, Hugh Keiser, Hugh Thrift, Dr. C. N. Chipman, Dudley Holtman, George H. Ward, David J. Guy and Howard Palmer.

Group 4—Wilbur La Roe, jr., chairman; Arthur Adelman, Dr. C. P. Clark, Austin Cooper, E. H. De Groot, jr., Alton Grinnell, Everett Haycraft, M. H. Hess, William H. Ramsey, E. L. Stevenson, William O. Tufts and M. D. Lamborne.

Group 5—Harold N. Marsh, chairman; Dr. E. DeC. Adams, Albert W. Atwood, Bruce Baird, Walter Bastian, Edward S. Brashears, Walter Britt, Robert F. Fleming, Claud Livingston, Roy O. Prince and Benjamin H. Pester.

Dr. Anderson Urges Spiritual Courage During Lenten Season

A plea for spiritual courage in the Lenten season was sounded yesterday by Dr. Howard Stone Anderson at the weekly Washington Federation of Churches' services.

To have courage, people should keep their minds on what they have and what they are, advised the pastor of First Congregational Church, paying a neighborly call on Epiphany Church, 1317 G street northwest, three blocks away.

Dr. Anderson reminded that too many persons today are brooding over the things they lack. This attitude, he said, "gnaws at humanity like a cancer, bringing dissatisfaction and bitterness."

Dr. Sexsmith Presides

His second suggestion for gaining courage was the use of one's full power of endurance. "The Christian believes the source of his greatest courage is his faith in God, and that they are partners in a spiritual enterprise," he said.

Dr. Edgar A. Sexsmith, pastor of the Rhode Island Avenue Methodist Church, presided.

Earlier in the day Dr. Joseph R. Sizoo's appearance in the same pulpit drew another throng of worshipers. Former pastor of New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, he speaks again today and tomorrow at 12:05 p. m.

Chevy Chase Meeting

Protestant churchgoers of the Chevy Chase area met last night at the Chevy Chase Methodist Church for their weekly union Lenten rites, and heard a message from the Rev. George D. Heaton, of Lynchburg, Va. The Rev. Edward G. Latch was host pastor.

Dr. G. Ellis Williams, superintendent of the West Washington District, Baltimore Conference, Methodist Church, addressed yesterday's daily services of Southeast Protestant congregations at the Penn Theater, where the Rev. Edward Gabler, rector of Christ Episcopal Church, Navy Yard, preaches today at 12:05 p. m.

Bishop Hughes to Speak To Methodist Board

Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, resident prelate of the Methodist Church, will address the annual meeting of the Methodists Home's Board of Managers today at 10:30 a. m. at the institution, 4901 Connecticut avenue northwest.

Mrs. Harry Hoskinson, president of the board, will preside.

Astonishing Way to Relieve Raw Throat from a Cold in a Hurry

Follow easy steps in pictures below . . . But be sure you use fast-acting Bayer Aspirin

1 To relieve sore throat from cold, crush and stir 3 Bayer Aspirin Tablets in ½ glass of water until completely dissolved.

2 Gargle thoroughly. Tilt head way back to get full benefit from the Aspirin solution. This eases soreness in a hurry.

3 Check temperature. If you have a fever and temperature does not go down—if throat pain is not quickly relieved, call your doctor.

No strong medicines to upset system . . . the modern method that acts with amazing speed.

If your throat shows signs of rawness from a cold, follow the directions the pictures here illustrate. No strong medicines are needed with this simple modern way . . . Thousands of doctors advise it as the effective, sensible method of quick relief for their patients to use.

The Bayer gargle will amaze you. In a short time, it will ease throat rawness and soreness wonderfully. Take Bayer Aspirin internally, of course, to quickly relieve the painful body symptoms of your cold—headaches, muscular discomfort.

See Your Doctor. Even though he may wholeheartedly approve using Bayer Aspirin to relieve painful symptoms, you should not fail to see your family physician, because many colds may lead to serious consequences.

Try it. Always ask for Bayer Aspirin by the full name (not for just "aspirin"). See that you get it. The Bayer cross stamped on every tablet is your safeguard.

Rizzi Gets 18 Points To Lead Hilltoppers' Surprise Attack In Tech High Gym

By Bill Burnett

In a glorious last-ditch effort to atone for an unsuccessful cage season, Georgetown University closed its season with a 43-39 upset triumph over George Washington last night as over 3,000 fans sat in on the local rivalry at Tech gym.

Beaten decisively in the first meeting of the teams this year, and in the first clash between the two last year after athletic rivalry was resumed, the youthful Hoyas trailed for a period and a half, put on the steam as the closing minutes approached, and won almost as they wished.

Pleasing as it was to Hilltop supporters, the outcome succeeded only in beclouding the District collegiate championship issue. The Hoyas had previously lost to Maryland as well as G. W., and the Colonials in turn had previously beaten Maryland.

Irving Rizzi, kinky-pated guard of the Hoyas, as usual supplied the scoring punch in his team's attack, this time netting 18 points for scoring honors of the game. And second to Rizzi ran the Colonials' Reds Auerbach, one of two seniors seeing their last action under the Buff banner. Auerbach rang up 16 points.

G. W. Dominates

From the opening tip-off, when the Colonials' Matt Zunic grabbed the ball, later to assist Auerbach in the game's first two-pointer, there was every indication that G. W. would win without extending itself. Quickly it raced into a 9-1 lead, largely on the strength of goals by little Bobby Gilham.

As a matter of fact, eight and a half minutes of the first session had elapsed before the Hoyas finally hit the ring from the field. It was Rizzi who turned the trick and before more than two minutes had passed G. W. held a mere 15-12 lead. At the half, however, G. W. had boosted that to 23-19.

Throughout the half, despite the scant four-point margin, G. W. played its foe into the ground, the latter keeping in the running chiefly due to the work of Rizzi. As the second half began, shots which had fallen for the Colonials in the first period began sliding off the ring and Georgetown at the same time hit a hot streak.

At the midmark the winners had battled to withing one point of a deadlock, and a second later Capt. Johnny Schmitt gave his team its first lead of the game, 31 to 30.

Then the Colonials again hit their stride to take a 35-to-31 lead. It was their last of the game. In quick succession Schmitt rang up three field shots, Al Lujack added a foul throw and Rizzi got in two points' worth.

Roosevelt Gets Glens Falls Bid

Roosevelt High, newly installed Interhigh basketball champion, yesterday received and accepted its second out-of-town tournament bid—an invitation to play in the Eastern States tourney in Glens Falls, N. Y., on March 27-30, it was announced by Coach Herman Littman.

The Riders several days ago accepted a bid to the Southern States event in Durham, N. C., on March 15-16.

Though anxious to play in both affairs, the possibility was that only one of the tourneys would eventually be entered by the school which owns its first public school crown in 21 years.

Assistant Superintendent C. W. Holmes, reached at his home last night, said he knew of no Interhigh rule forbidding the titlists entering more than one out-of-town event.

"Precedent, however," said Holmes, "is against the practice as well as several other things. It seems like carrying things to the extreme to me. The superintendent of schools, who has the final say on such matters, will probbaly allow the Glens Falls trip but not that to Durham."

Patty Berg, Betty Hicks Are Victors

By the Associated Press

St. Augustine, Fla., March 6.—California's Elizabeth Hicks was the only favorite who had trouble staying in the annual Florida East Coast Women's Golf Tournament here today.

She eliminated Elizabeth Wing, of Evanston, Ill., 3 and 1 in first-round competition, but had to stage a real comeback to do it while the other favorites—National Champion Betty Jameson, of San Antonio, Tex.; former Champion Patty Berg, of Minneapolis; Clara Callender, of Long Beach, Calif., and others—were advacing easily into the second round.

Three up on Miss Wing as they finished the eighth, Miss Hicks lost control completely and dropped the next three holes. She regained the lead on the thirteenth, however, when Miss Wing took three strokes to get down from the edge of the carpet, and made it 2 up on the sixteenth when Miss Wing muffed her tee shot. The match ended on the next green when Miss Wing three-putted.

Miss Callender, Miss Jameson's roommate and runner-up for medal honors yesterday, ousted Mrs. T. E. Schuldenberg, of Baltimore, 6 and 5.

'Griff' Terms Quartet Best Since 1933

Travis, Bloodworth, Pofahl and Wasdell Are Spectacular in Orlando Workouts

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent

Orlando, Fla., March 6.—"The best Washington infield since 1933." That is the way Clark Griffith and Bucky Harris are chorusing the praise of the four young men they have stationed at the Nats' infield posts. Reading from third base to first, Cecil Travis, Jimmy Pofahl, Jimmy Bloodworth and Jimmy Wasdell are delighting the Nats' bosses with their sure-handed performances here.

Not only has the youthful quartet impressed Griffith and Harris with its potentialities, but it has been bedazzling spectators at the Nats' workouts with its daily 15 minutes of fancy fielding which climaxes each workout.

Harris Should Know

"There hasn't been anything like it in our infield since Joe Kuhel, Buddy Myer, Joe Cronin and Ossi Bluege won the pennant for us in '33, declared Griffith today. "This infield is going to take our club a long way toward the first division."

Manager Harris, an infielder by trade in his playing days, and properly appreciative of the assets of a high-class infield, is already far out on a limb in his appraisal of his current infield line-up.

"There's no substitute for youth," said Harris. "Those kids are all fired up. That wouldn't mean much if they weren't good ball handlers, but they are. They can scamper around that infield, making the hard stops, the kind that ruins a club if they go for hits.

"They've been putting on a show for the past week. It isn't just fancy stuff that they've been showing me. They haven't been muffing anything and they've been throwing that ball around the way a manager likes to see it. If I'm mistaken about this infield of ours, I'll never trust my judgment again."

Have Tough Task

It is an infield, incidentally, that doesn't have much of a background as infields go. Cecil Travis this season is returning to third base after a four-year term as shortstop. Young Jimmy Pofahl is fresh out of the minors. Jimmy Bloodworth hasn't played 100 big league games in his life. Jimmy Wasdell was labeled a flop at first base only last summer.

Moreover, they are taking over jobs of an infield quartet which last season led the league in the execution of double plays. Of the Wash-

Carasquel Shows Up Here; Detoured From Venezuela

The question of "where is Alejandro Carasquel" was solved for the Nats yesterday as that worthy turned up suddenly at Griffith Stadium and informed a highly agitated night watchman he had just pulled in from New York City, and wanted to join his mates in Orlando, Fla.

Alejandro, sometimes called Alexandra for convenience's sake, had to take a boat from his native Venezuela all the way to New York because of the present European war. Steamship service from his South American home to Cuba and Carribean Sea points is practically nil.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

Orlando, Fla., March 6.—Manager Joe McCarthy, of the Yankees, keeps out of all salary squabbles and is content to let the front-office deal with the players . . . for the same reason that Bucky Harris cheerfully takes no part in the Nats' salary disputes . . . McCarthy and Harris know that they have to live with the players . . . The Reds and the Giants will be the biggest single contributors to the Spring All-Star game for the Finnish Relief Fund . . . they gave up a Sunday exhibition date at Tampa to permit the game to be scheduled on March 17, despite the fact that each club stood to profit to the extent of $1,000 on the exhibition . . . Red Sox Rookie Dominic DiMaggio is supposed to look like Brother Vince of the Reds and play like Brother Joe of the Yankees . . . wanna bet on that last? . . . Correspondents with the Athletics in California declare that Benny McCoy will be the American League's biggest drawing card next season . . . they forgot to add "if he makes good."

POVICH

Jimmy Foxx is suing his partner in a St. Petersburg public links enterprise . . . and asking for an accounting of the $5,000 Foxx put into the business . . . Not the pennant-winning Reds, but the second-place Cardinals of 1939 will be the favorite to win the 1940 race, according to Betting Commissioner Jack Doyle . . . The Yankees will be 1-to-4 in the American League race and the Nats will be rated as 40-to-1 shots . . . Manager Oscar Vitt of the Indians has caught "the Yankees can be licked" fever . . . he thinks he can turn the trick with his new second base combination of Boudreau and Mack . . . Strangely enough, the Reds have asked waivers on Pitcher Whitey Moore, the left-hander who hurled three innings against the Yankees in the 1938 World Series and didn't allow a hit.

There is general agreement among baseball men outside of the Tigers' camp that the Detroit club is making a stupid move in shifting Hank Greenberg from first base to the outfield . . . Greenberg was a star at first base and figures to be only a mediocre outfielder at best . . . his own willingness to make the shift he used as a wedge in averting a salary cut this season . . . Gerald Walker, of the Nats, reports that his old Detroit buddy, Schoolboy Rowe, is definitely set for a great season on the mound . . . "You'll see the old Rowe out there pitching this year," says Walker. "He's rid of that sore-arm business." . . . The Sporting News rates Bucky Harris as one of the dozen best-dressed figures in professional sports . . . Harris was no little perturbed when Jimmie Pofahl, the Nats' expensive rookie, reported that he had been playing basketball during the winter . . . "You'll have to cut that out," said Harris. "The pounding my feet took on hard basketball floors cut five years off my playing career. Basketball and swimming are the two worst forms of exercise for a ball player."

Five years ago when Joe Cronin took over the management of the Boston Red Sox, he was mercilessly blasted by a Washington sportswriter who called him "swell-headed and high-hat," among other things . . . not long ago that same sports writer was out of a job and, needing money, wrote a success story built around Cronin for a slick magazine . . . the mag liked the story but would not purchase it unless Cronin's name appeared as the author . . . in desperation, the writer dispatched a letter to Cronin offering him half the money if Cronin would permit the use of his name, adding that he was now out of a job and profoundly sorry for having put the blast on Cronin years before . . . He got an immediate answer from Cronin, giving him the okay . . . but that wasn't all . . . Cronin told the fellow to keep all of the money; that he held no grudge . . . which is one of the reasons Cronin is ace-high in baseball writing circles.

The Phillies, who train at Miami, Florida's richest and most populous city, don't draw a handful of spectators to their workouts . . . Newspaper correspondents with the Giants in bone-dry Winter Haven, Fla., spent a week in the place before they ferreted out the town's only speakeasy . . . in the interim they were forced to find their excitement at a shooting gallery . . . George Ruppert, brother of the late Col. Ruppert, and now one-third owner of the Yankees, is no fan . . . when Joe DiMaggio was hurt last summer and out of the lineup for two weeks, a friend of George Ruppert's asked the latter how DiMaggio was progressing . . . "Why, is there anything the matter with him?" asked Ruppert . . . who until then did not become aware that DiMaggio had been in a New York hospital for a week.

Joe Tinker, now an Orlando real estate operator, admitted three years ago that for a period of years on the old Cubs he did not speak a word to Johnny Evers . . . but he has steadfastly refused to relate what came between them . . . Dutch Leonard operates a duckpin bowling establishment in his native Auburn, Ill., and in one season has recouped his $3,500 investment . . . the story of Leonard's amazing baseball career, an ugly duckling-beautiful swan piece, will soon appear in a popular magazine . . . was the sofetning of Judge Landis' attitude toward major league farm systems due to the fact that he will be up for reelection next year?

Mel Shorey Takes Over Pro Golf Job at Indian Spring

East Potomac Successor to Be Undecided Until Return of Chief; Terry Considered

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Mel Shorey, professional at the East Potomac Golf Club for 15 years, transferred his club affiliations to Indian Spring last night when the board of governors at the Four Corners Club unanimously accepted his application for the vacant pro post.

S. G. Leoffler, lessee of the East Potomac course, has already received several applications for Shorey's job, as The Post predicted he was the likely choice at Indian Spring. Owen Terry, former Chevy Chase pro, is being considered, but Leoffler, who will be out of town for a few days, will leave the position wide open until he returns.

Shorey, who gives thousands of lessons each year and is one of the top playing pros in the Middle Atlantic P. G. A., will take over the nine-hole Indian Spring layout vacated last week by Al Jamison as soon as he can complete his affairs at the downtown municipal course.

Four local professionals and out-of-town applicants from Michigan, West Virginia and Florida were all given thorough consideration before Shorey, favorite of the members for the position, was accepted.

Earl W. Clary, president of the board, made the announcement, A. S. Kay, new owner of the club, turned the selection over to Clary and his committeemen. John F. Feeney was elected chairman of the golf committee at the meeting.

Shorey will confer with club officials on moving the golf shop. The former shop will be torn down and the new location is expected to be in the present locker room building, adjacent to the tenth tee.

Shorey is the third pro at Indian Spring in as many years. George Diffenbaugh resigned in the spring of 1938 and was succeeded by Al Jamison, who resigned two weeks ago.

Rains Postpone 4-Ball Florida Play

Coral Gables, Fla., March 6 (INS).—Heavy rains today caused postponement of the final match of the international 4-ball golf tournament until next Saturday.

Dick Metz and Ky Laffoon will clash in the final with Billy Burke and Craig Wood for the championship won last year by Ralph Guldahl and Sam Snead.

NATS' ROOKIE PARADE

At Orlando Camp

EDDIE LEIP—Second Baseman

In appearance, Eddie Leip is the Dead-End Kid of the Nats—a bit undersized and possessor of a broken nose and jutting jaw that guarantees that he was never called a sissy; or, if he was, that he never stood for it.

EDDIE LEIP

He came off the Trenton sandlots in 1936 to jump directly into Class A ball with the home-town Trenton club of the Eastern League but two weeks sufficed to prove that he didn't belong there. It was a shock to the home-town folks to realize that Eddie was merely a green-pea sandlotter.

Joe Cambria, Washington scout, had scented some talent in the stocky, 5-foot-8-inch, 160-pounder and in 1937 he sent him to Salisbury, in the Eastern Shore League. There the kid blossomed as the star second baseman of Salisbury's famed "wonder team" which was deprived of 26 victories by a technicality, yet made a late-season surge to win the pennant by winning 25 out of 26 games.

He was still in Salisbury in 1938, doing a swell job of playing second base in that Class D league, and Cambria promoted him to Greenville in the Sally League last season. Before half the season had been played, Manager Bill Terry of the Giants made Cambria an offer for Leip, but the lad was now regarded as a valuable chattel in the Washington farm system and it was no dice with the Giants.

One of the things the Nats liked about Leip aside from his brilliant handling of the ball at Greenville was his .323 batting average, and they brought him in to Griffith Stadium far a tryout last September. He played in nine games, broke up a pair with ninth-inning hits, batted .344, and labeled himself as a sure-shot for another tryout in Orlando this spring.

He came down to Orlando fresh from his off-season job in a refrigerator factory at Trenton where his dad is the chief mechanic of the Trenton Police Garage. He's not too ebony-hued a dark-horse in the three-cornered fight for the Washington second base job in which he is finding Buddy Myer and Jimmy Bloodworth as his rivals.

Yankees Play Themselves In Florida Camp—It's a Tie

By the Associated Press

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 6.—As might be expected when the world champion New York Yankees play themselves, their first camp baseball game today was a 7-to-7 standoff.

Charley Keller, slugging sensation of the last World Series, picked up where he had left off and hit two triples and a single in five times at bat, driving in two runs.

Pitchers were George Washburn, Lee Grissom and Marvin Breuer, for Bill Dickey's squad, and Bump Hadley, Marius Russo and Steve Sundra, for the team headed by Keller.

Koy a Riot at Bat

Clearwater, Fla., March 6 (AP).—Outfielder Ernie Koy took a batting lesson from Manager Leo Durocher today and all but broke up a practice game between two groups of Brooklyn Dodgers.

Coaxed into swinging his bat with a smooth swing instead of starting with a jerkey motion, Koy hit two home runs and two singles in five innings as Durocher's nine whipped Coach Carley Dressen's team, 11 to 2.

Boston, March 6 (U.P.).—W. Cameron Forbes, former United States Ambassador to Japan, has given his $1,000,000 polo field and buildings at Norwood to the Harvard Polo Association, it was announced tonight.

Maj. Chester Sargent, Harvard coach who made the announcement, said that efforts would be made to bring the intercollegiate polo matches here for the first time in June.

Last Two D. C. Boxers Lose Glove Bouts

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York City, March 6.—Washington, D. C., was left without a representative in the finals of the Eastern Golden Gloves amateur boxing tournament tonight before a packed house of 17,000 in Madison Square Garden as Gilbert Mayo, featherweight, and Danny Petro, flyweight, dropped decisions in their semifinal fights.

Mayo, who scored one of the quickest knockouts in Eastern gloves history Tuesday night, was favored to win the 126-pound berth on the all-Eastern team.

A chance remained, however, for Washington's 175-pounder. Jim Brady, Georgetown University student, to get the light-heavyweight spot on the all-Eastern team, which will meet a Western team here this month from Chicago.

The United States Naval Academy's boxing coach, Spike Webb, offered to let Brady fight after his conqueror, Stanley Goicz, received a cut eye, which will rule him out. Brady lost a disputed decision to Goicz.

Rookies Give Nats Double-Play Duo

Shortstop Jimmy Pofahl (left) flips the ball to Jimmy Bloodworth to start a double play in the Nats' Orlando camp. The cohesion of this pair around second base has delighted Manager Bucky Harris, who rates Pofahl and Bloodworth as the finest double-play combination the Nats have boasted in a half dozen years

Northeast Unlimited, 145-Pound Teams Win in Post Play

Overtime Contest In Unlimited Class Features 1st Round; Hoya Hot-Shots Bow

A quartet of former high school basketball stars lasted a trifle longer than a mixture of Georgetown University athletes in the first unlimited game of the annual District A. A. U. basketball tournament last night at Heurich gym and the Northeast Boys Club five scored 54-49 over the Georgetown Hoya Hot Shots in an extra period.

Tied at the end of the first half, 22 all, and again at the regulation game, 43-43, the teams opened The Washington Post sponsored event with a game that would befit the finals.

Three former Central High stars, playing for the Marvin's Credit five, scored a majority of the points as Farm Credit Administration bowed, 52 to 46, in another close unlimited game last on the initial night's card.

Marvin's led, 20 to 18, at halftime, but the Government five knotted the count four times in the second half before Rex Smith and Jack Moulton, former Centralites, led a scoring spree that pulled their team to a 6-point advantage.

Moulton's 14 points topped the scorers, while Smith and two members of the losers, Flynn and Brockman, scored 13 points. Gibson was also outstanding for FCA.

The inaugural contest of the three-game card and the only 145-pound game to be played, Northeast Boys Club teams batted a thousand for the evening as the lighter weight five scored, 28-19, over Prince Georges County Police Boys Club 145-pounders.

Presenting three former Eastern High players in Cooksey, Embrey and Battiste, in addition to Eli Blank, of Tech, the Northeast unlimited team found a star in Leslie Cooksey, who dropped in two of the telling baskets in the extra period.

The Northeast Boys 145-pound team took an early lead over their suburban rivals and were never seriously threatened. Scoring was well divided for both teams with Colie leading the winners and Ferrar the losers.

G.A.O. Plays Bell Clothiers

Three fast games are scheduled for tonight in the first round of the District A. A. U. championship tournament, being sponsored by The Washington Post. The Heurich Gymnasium, Twenty-sixth and D streets northwest, will be the scene of two unlimited and one 145-pound clashes, starting at 7:30 p. m. The usual nominal admission fee of 25 cents will be charged.

Recreation League rivals, the Bell Clothiers and the General Accounting Office fives, will battle it out, starting at 9:30 p. m. An hour earlier, Theta Delta Chi will make its bid against elimination, meeting the Petworth Athletic Club team.

The program will open with a struggle of the Y. M. C. A. and Congress Heights clubs in the 145-pound division. The "Y" team will be a slight favorite in what appears to be a keen battle.

A promising contest is booked in the 145-pound class tomorrow night. This will make the first appearance of the Stewart Brothers Aces in this division. The Aces have a brilliant record and have worked their way up through the weight ranks of The Post tournaments, collecting titles, trophies and medals along the way. The Aces will test the mettle of Washington Flour, a team that has done well in organized basketball this winter.

Two unlimited class frays also are programmed for tomorrow. The Census Bureau Americans will tackle Bellman Heating and Treasury Department meets the spirited Greenbelt A. C., representing the thriving Maryland community.

Joe, Angry With Rickey on Salary Debate, Leaves Cards Team at St. Petersburg; $20,000 Contract Reported His Aim

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, March 6.—Joe Medwick, leader of the Nation's holdout division, flew back home from training camp today, a disgruntled, dissatisfied ballplayer but certain the St. Louis Cardinals would not let his $200,000 talents remain idle.

In a huff because Branch Rickey, vice president of the Cardinals, had failed to meet him yesterday to discuss salary terms, the slugging outfielder left St. Petersburg, Fla., where the team is training, and came to St. Louis by airplane.

A die-hard holdout, he said he intended to remain here at his home and carry on a fireside sit-out until club officials came to him with a suitable contract for the coming season.

Wants to Play

The hot-tempered player, who has had many altercations on the field, said he was in good shape and ready to play, but he saw no reason for remaining at St. Petersburg while unsigned. He has never hit under .300 during his major league career.

"I want to play ball," he declared, "but I don't think the Cardinals have treated me fairly."

Medwick would not disclose the details of his salary squabble with the club, but it was understood he was asking for $20,000, which would restore the $2,000 cut he took last year when he signed for $18,000 after a lengthy holdout.

Was Most Valuable

The outfielder, voted the National League's most valuable player in 1937, when he won the batting championship, said he wasn't worried about the possibility he would be out of the game this season.

"They're not going to let $200,000 lie around idle, are they?" he asked.

There have been reports the Brooklyn Dodgers have offered $200,000 for Medwick.

In St. Petersburg, Sam Breadon, president of the Cardinals, said he had offered to confer with Medwick at noon today and expressed surprise the outfielder had gone home. He said there was no one in St. Louis to negotiate with Medwick, since Rickey was on his way to Florida.

Cards Could Finish First —Ray Blades

By the Associated Press

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 6.—Ray Blades appreciates the compliment inferred in the choice of the Cardinals by many to finish first in the National League, but if the critics had just picked his club as "Miss St. Louis" or "Queen of the Corn Festival" he'd feel much better about it all.

BLADES

This "Thanks very much, the pleasure is all yours" attitude sprouts from his belief that any one of six clubs have a chance to win the pennant. The Phillies and the Bees, he figures, have just enough strength to hold the tail end of the league.

He reclined on a dressing table in his two-by-four locker room between the daily double practice sessions. Coach Mike Gonzales flashed a gold-toothed smile, dressed hurriedly and left for nourishment. But Blades just rested and pondered, explaining he wasn't lunching these days. Some ball clubs could take away a manager's appetite, at that, although the Cards aren't that type.

"I don't like it very well," he protested, referring to the rating given his club. "Any of six clubs, if it gets the breaks, could win, and Cincinnati certainly is the team to beat.

"Our pitching should be all right, with Curt Davis, Bob Bowman, Bill McGee, Morton Cooper, Lon Warneke, who was handicapped by the flu last year, and others."

It was recalled that Blades worked his pitchers in shifts last year, with comparatively few going the route. It looked like a shuffle relay race between the bull pen and the mound, and not very many fumbled the baton, at that.

Maryland Park Beats Woodridge

After forcing the game into two extra periods, Maryland Park Boys Club basketball team took a 41-40 victory over Woodridge A. C. last night in the last 15 seconds of play in their own gym.

Little Hoyas Replace G. W. Five Tonight

Alexandrians Withdraw From Metro Tourney Due to Va. State Play

Minus one of its original fives, but with a team every bit as strong filling the vacancy, the Metropolitan scholastic basketball tournament winds up quarter-final action tonight with a double-header at Tech Gym, starting at 7:30.

George Washington High, of Alexandria, yesterday was forced to withdraw from the Metro event when the dates clashed with the Virginia State tournament finals, in which the Presidents meet Glass High, of Lynchburg, on the Alexandria floor Saturday.

In place of the Alexandrians, Georgetown Prep will meet Eastern, the defending champion, in tonight's nightcap, while Bethesda-Chevy Chase and Washington-Lee are slated to open hostilities.

Explaining G. W.'s withdrawal from the Metro event, Principal H. T. Moncure said:

"We are extremely sorry the necessity of getting out of the District and suburban tourney has been forced upon us. We had hoped the dates might not clash. Yet, a Class A ruling here in Virginia states that the finals must be run off on or before March 9. Therefore, the only way we could play in the Metro semifinals, which are also March 9, would be to forfeit to Glass. After conferences with Metropolitan Tournament heads and with Alexandria figures we have decided it is our duty to complete Virginia play."

With a record of 14 victories in 20 games behind it, Georgetown Prep presents a formidable front to Eastern's champs. Among their triumphs the Garrett Parkers include a 35-to-33 beating of Woodrow Wilson, two wide victories over Rockville and a 7-point edge over Episcopal. In a meeting with Central the Preppers lost a close 25-to-19 decision.

Tonight's winners will pair off with Gonzaga and Roosevelt in the semifinals Saturday. Finals will be staged Monday.

Penn Cagers Score, 36-35, Over Harvard

By the Associated Press

Cambridge, Mass., March 6.—Pennsylvania turned the tables on Harvard tonight, scoring a 36-to-35 basketball decision over the Crimson in another nip and tuck battle between these two Eastern Intercollegiate League rivals.

The Quakers, overturned, 47 to 45, by Harvard in Philadelphia a week ago, stepped out fast and ran up a 15-to-8 lead in the first ten minutes. Harvard whittled down the margin and was trailing by only one point at half-time.

Bennie Schrieber gave the Quakers the winning margin by making good on a free try with less than a minute to play. Harvard had knotted the count at 35-all on a field goal by Joe Romano just before Schrieber was fouled.

Princeton Wins, Ties for Second

New York, March 6 (AP).—Staving off a desperate but belated bid by Columbia, the Princeton Tigers scored a 34-to-30 Eastern Intercollegiate Basketball League triumph tonight, to tie Cornell for second place in the standings.

The sharpshooting of Bob Stewart and Paul Busse helped Princeton achieve a 25-to-17 advantage at half-time.

Guy Dailey Dies; Was Jeffries' Old Manager

Pittsburgh, March 6 (AP).—Guy Dailey, 63, former vaudeville swimming star and one-time manager of Jim Jeffries, the fighter, died today.

Billed on the stage as the "human fish," Bailey was credited with originating the stunt of eating bananas and drinking milk under water. He left vaudeville in 1918 and served until 1935 as a city detective.

Rosslyn Pin Team Is Upset By Ice Palace

The District's top-average bowlers clashed last night and Ice Palace pinmen won a District League match over Rosslyn's league leaders, two games to one, on the Virginia alleys.

Ed Nash scored 391 and Jack Talbert 390 to lead Ice Palace to a 1,874 count, while Bill Krauss, captain, had 372. Perce Wolfe and Karl Gochenour led Rosslyn with 386 and 385, respectively. Astor Clarke fell back to 358, his second lowest set of the season. Rosslyn's final team game of 662 was best of the set.

CHEVY CHASE

Furman Cones and Al Donoghue tied with 403 sets in Washington Automobile League play at Chevy Chase. John Anderson's 165 game helped Arcade-Pontiac win three over Logan Motor. Emerson and Orme's 1,717 team set was good for a three-game sweep for the league leaders over Parkway, while L. P. Stuart had high game of 598.

ARCADIA

Al Wright and his teammates on American Security & Trust No. 1, carried off all Banker's League honors at Arcadia, Wright scoring a 154 game and 422 set while the team posted totals of 597 and 1,738.

Jesse Keith's 126 game and a 342 set by Virginia Lewis were best scores in the C. & P. Telephone Ladies League, while North led the teams with 513 and 1,481.

Joe Gersten's big game of 157 in the Dynamite League led to a set of 369 and the big score while Audicrats and Sleuths divided the team honors with a 560 game and 1,630 set. Gersten rolls for Audicrats.

LUCKY STRIKE

Crosse and Blackwell counted team game and set of 628 and 1,768 in winning two from the leading Wardman Park team in the D. G. S. League feature at Lucky Strike. Ellis Burka's 154 game and a 416 set by Stevens, of Wilkins Coffee, was high.

Edna Johnson's 313 game and 335 set for Washington Centennial led to an odd game decision over Mizpath in the Eastern Star League.

Rebecca Armstrong's 119 game and a 320 set by Dora Guillickson were features of the Lucky Strike Ladies League play, while FHA team members posted 507 and 1,423 game and set for a shutout over FAA, No. -.

A 122 game and 324 set by Louise Kidd paced the Stenographers team in the Commissioner and Miscellaneous Tax League, but the team dropped two to the leading Personnel.

Herbert Laity, captain of the District's only recognized ten-pin league, the Naval Tool Designers, had a 215 game, while his team tolled a 941 game and 2,659 set in blanking Destroyers.

QUEEN PIN

Frank's Tavern pinmen rolled a season's record set total of 1,779 in winning two games over Wolf's Market. Leading the record total was Frank Vichmyer with 156 and 402.

Joe Brewer's 385 led McKee-Pontiac to an odd game triumph over Eastern Pharmacy while Voveglio Club also contributed a season's record, a 641 game, but lost two to Standard Brand. Kavakos Grill, I. C. E., and Brosnehan Tinners score triple triumphs.

DISTRICT LADIES LEAGUE

Rosslyn's Ladies District League leaders drew nearer the pennant with a shutout over Red Circle, with Lucy Rose best with 147 game and 360 set. Vivian Nolan had 330 for the losers. Lucky Strike scored twice over Arcade Pontiac, with Lorraine Gulli's 128-347 high for the winners, in addition to a 126 game by Ingomar Moen.

Margaret Lynn's 127 game and a 342 set by National Singles Champion Mabelle Hering prevented a shutout for the losers.

Women Will Save the Game, Says World Billiard Champion

Ruth McGinnis, Here for Exhibitions, Takes Delight in Beating the Men at Their Own Game

By Al Hailey

Women have taken over bowling, golf, and softball, made inroads even into wrestling and football—and now man's last sanctum, the billiard parlors, are threatened.

This distressing situation was verified yesterday by none other than the woman pocket billiard champion of the world, Ruth McGinnis, who is in our town on an exhibition tour which already has carried her 12,000 miles or so.

She says things are not what they used to be in the pocket billiards business and that it's only fair that women do something about it.

"Women will save the game—look what they did to bowling," Miss McGinnis, who has a high run of 128, admonished.

Miss McGinnis was weilding a cue stick in such a way as to make the eyes of a jam-packed gallery bulge at the Arcadia bowling and billiard palace on Fourteenth street.

Gives Exhibition

After an hour's exhibition game with Wayne Stewart, local billiard expert, Miss McGinnis made billiard balls leap through hoops and gave out with a smashing volley of balls into the side-pocket—her "machine-gun" trick. Then she took time out to talk about things in the pocket billiard business.

Pocket billiards, which the boys in the back room used to call pool in the good old days, is a sport perfectly adapted to women, Miss McGinnis insists, because it offers recreational opportunities that won't lead to sore muscles and pulled ligaments.

"It certainly ought to improve their patience and disposition," she laughed. "It's a game they don't readily grasp and one that is especially wearing on the nerves and the eye. I've been on the golf links with women golfers, and I don't think Webster's ever could define the words that fly there."

Small, gray-eyed and most pleasant to look upon, Miss McGinnis' competition is composed almost entirely of men billiard stars simply because there are not enough women who have mastered the game.

"I get a big kick out of beating men because they always seem to be so anxious to show their superiority," she admitted. "Most of them play as though it were a matter of life or death. If I played that way I'd be a case for an institution in a few weeks."

College Graduate

At the billiard table, Miss McGinnis is a southpaw. But at everything else it's "50-50"—she's ambidextrous. She plays golf right-handed and tennis left-handed.

She won the woman's world championship in New York City in 1932 from Babe Didrickson, who was issuing challenges to women athletes in any and all sports at that time. Miss McGinnis just four years ago defeated Ralph Greenleaf, then world's champion, in New York, in a handicap exhibition match. She scarcely remembers when she lost a match.

Just 5 feet 3, Miss McGinnis has a hard time when the balls are in the center of the table and has to use the "bridge," a device attached

Hoyas Enter Blozis, Graves In Final Meet

Georgetown University's great track and field team closes its indoor season Saturday night when it sponsors three entries in the annual Knights of Columbus meet at Madison Square Garden.

Al Blozis, credited with two world records and a meet mark in his last three starts at Madison Square Garden, will be a competitor in the shot put once more; Georgetown's mile relay team also will run, and Phil Graves, fast-flying freshman, will be entered in the 1,000-yard run.

Blozis came within inches of his world record in the shot-put last week despite a sprained right wrist. He has enjoyed a complete rest this week and will be back in stride Saturday.

Time trials conducted yesterday to select a fourth man on the mile relay team found Charley Neumeyer barely nosing out George Bogan by two-tenths of a second. These trials were held in the absence of John Motzenbacker and George Tucknott, who are out with injuries. Neumeyer will round out a relay team otherwise comprised off Vinnie Braun, Ken Lyden and Morty Alnwick.

Graves, a freshman at Georgetown, promises to develop into one of the greatest distance runners in the East and is conceded a fine chance of scoring in the 1,000-yard invitation event.

Brucker Leads A's To Third Victory

Anaheim, Calif., March 6 (AP).—Earle Brucker, first-string catcher while Frankie Hayes is a holdout, paced the Philadelphia Athletics to a 12-to-3 victory over Portland of the Pacific Coast League in an exhibition game here today.

Brucker contributed two doubles to the A's 17 hits besides turning in a good backstopping job for four innings. Eddie Collins, jr., turned in a triple and single and Benny McCoy a single and double.

It was the A's third exhibition victory in as many games.

Boxers Camp Here Waiting New Season

Offerings of Three Promoters Make Town Haven for Fighters

Sensing a heavy upswing in the boxing business in Washington come spring and the outdoor season, professional fighters and their managers are starting to march on the Capital from the North and South to take up permanent headquarters, Promoter Joe Turner proudly announced yesterday.

This summer, with Severine G. Loeffler promoting in Riverside Stadium, Goldie Ahearn holding forth in Griffith Stadium, and Turner promoting in a spot as yet undetermined, promises to offer plenty of employment for the far-sighted lads heading this way.

Kenny LaSalle, of Houston, Tex., is coming to the Capital to stick around and see what happens after his 10-round bout with Phil Furr Monday night in Turner's Arena, according to the propagandists.

Kenny, fifth-ranking welterweight in the world, received a big hand here last summer when he decisioned Steve Mamakos in the ball park. Sam (The Mumbler) Sobol, who manages LaSalle, is also considering bringing along his stablemate, Ben Brown, ranking middleweight, to take up residence here. Buddy Scott, heavyweight, already has given his intentions of coming back to Washington.

Ken Overlin, who meets Middleweight Champion Ceferino Garcia in Madison Square Garden in May, is working out daily at the Huron gymnasium. Carl (Red) Gugino, New Yorker, and Tony Tobias, welterweight, are back to stay, Turner said. Tobias meets El Brookman, local welterweight, in the eight-round semifinal Monday night.

Jim Londos Back Tonight Against Cox

LONDOS

Jim Londos, who still insists he's king of the wrestling gentry, despite the fact his age is in the fifties, will return to Washington tonight for another so-called "world's championship" affair with Joe Cox at Turner's Arena.

The amazing Greek, who has never bowed to local competition, went through a routine with Bob Wagner in his last appearance here and showed he still has the box-office appeal he had when wrestling was serious business instead of an exhibition of histrionics.

Despite the talk of his retiring from wrestling and going back to Greece to "forget" what they now call wrestling, Jim seems intent on carrying on. He never lingers now, however, to boast that he'll live to be 150 years old because he's taken such good care of himself. That used to be his plaint in the old days. He simply dashes into town, tosses out a few agonized expressions, throws his opponent around and collects his money.

Lou Plummer and Tommy O'Toole will perform in the semifinal. Other preliminaries bring Ralph Garibaldi against Abie Coleman, Alan Eustace against Frank Judson and Cliff Olsen against Jack Russell. Slaughter begins at 8:30 p. m.

Northeast Boys Club Gets the Jump

Colt Returns $23 in First Winter Win

Favorite Cerisse III Runs Sixth in Field Of Seven; Muddy Track Prevails

By the Associated Press

Tropical Park, Fla., March 6.—The Clearwater Purse, 1 mile and 70 yards affair for $3,000 claiming horses, held the honored spot on today's program. A photo finish saw C. H. Scott's Off Guard scoring his first winter triumph in six attempts, while the place went to W. J. Susini's pacemaking Night Tide. Felsun, representing the King Farm of C. Leroy King, lost the place by three lengths.

The racing strip was a sea of slop and mud following torrential rains that fell late in the night and early this morning.

Off Guard, which closed out his Northern campaign with a victory at Narragansett last November, was lightly backed in the field of seven. The colt returned $23 and negotiated the distance in 1:45 3-5 under Don Meade.

Cerisse III, trained by Hirsch Jacobs, burned up a lot of the talent's money. The South American showed some early speed, then faded back to sixth place. A total of $21,517 was lost on Cerisse III in the straight, place and show pools, $12,956 of it to win. The King Farm took the mare via the claiming route.

Felsun's Bid Late

Jack Flinchum's followers cheered lustily as their idol took Night Tide into a daylight lead and kept the gelding in front until the last stride. Night Tide's lead began to diminish late in the last furlong as Off Guard, nicely rated off the leaders by Meade, loomed a threat. The result was in doubt until the official numbers were posted. Felsun's bid came too late.

A dozen maiden fillies answered the post call in the day's opening event, and victory went to the first time starter, Straddle On. The daughter of Don Leon, one of the numerous paddock tips in the event, took kindly to the going and, after a long, hard duel with Fantasma, prevailed by a half length. Fantasma saved the place, three lengths before Philomel. Straddle On paid $12.20 and reported in 0:48 flat.

Making her first public appearance since the Empire City meeting last July, the 7-year-old mare Sheknows scored a handy triumph in the 6-furlong second race. The veteran was backed into 3-to-1 favoritism. With Jack Flinchum up, the daughter of Jack High outfooted her opposition from the start and reached the wire a length and a half on top.

Arched Easy Winner

Alfred Robertson, who reported sick and canceled his mounts the previous day, returned to the saddle in the third race and guided Arched to an easy four-length score. Magic Dream, the choice, was second by a head, with Deep Summer annexing the show. Arched had the foot of the field, taking immediate command and galloping along with nothing to fear at any stage of the 6 furlongs. The colt returned $8.20.

Shifting from sprint competition to a test of a mile and 70 yards, Maetran proved equal to the task in the fourth contest. The Paul Codd campaigner registered by four lengths to pay $8.30. Sallie Kay was just as easily second over Blare. Maetran and Sallie Kay closed equal choices for the race. Sallie Kay stole a daylight lead. The filly was no match for Maetran, however, when the latter made his move near the head of the stretch.

Hollywood Calls 'Skin Star for 'Cisco' Film

Boyd Morgan, Washington Redskin halfback, has signed up to play a part in the movie "The Return of the Cisco Kid," it was revealed yesterday by Redskin headquarters.

The role will be Morgan's third in movies lately, the former Southern California star having also played in "Seahawk" and "Sailor's Lady." In addition to acting, Morgan is trying for an advanced degree at his alma mater during the off season.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—STRADDLE ON, $12.20, $7.40, $6.10; FANTASMA, $9.20, $6.00; PHILOMEL, $4.80.

STRADDLE ON, away forwardly, followed the leaders closely on the outside, responded to pressure in the final furlong and drew away. FANTASMA, quickest to begin, saved ground all the way, but was not equal to the winner in the final drive. PHILOMEL swung around the leaders entering the stretch and closed with a rush.

WEATHER, CLEAR. TRACK, MUDDY.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $900; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 2:34. Off 2:36. Winner, G. Shaw's ch. m. (7), by Jack High—Piarcany. Trained by F. Waring. Value to winner, $650; second, $150; third, $75; fourth, $25. Time, 1:14⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SHEKNOWS, $8.00, $4.50, $3.20; LINA'S SON, $4.90, $3.60; SHE'S RIGHT, $3.90.

SHEKNOWS outbroke the field, held her field safe for speed and, rated in front in the early stages, drew out entering the stretch to win under light pressure. LINA'S SON broke tardily, slipped through on the inside all the way and made a bold bid on the stretch turn, but could not get up. SHE'S RIGHT, on the outside and a keen factor throughout, outlasted UGIN in the final drive.

Daily Double, STRADDLE ON and SHEKNOWS, Paid $65.70

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $900; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Puett gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 3:02½. Off 3:02½. Winner, D. Shaw's ch. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ARCHED, $8.20, $4.10, $3.50; MAGIC DREAM, $4.50, $3.80; DEEP SUMMER, $6.30.

ARCHED, at home in the going, drew out into a commanding lead in the opening half mile and was in hand the remainder of the trip. MAGIC DREAM broke a trifle slow, went into contention on the inside in the early stages, but faltered and was vigorously ridden to stave off DEEP SUMMER. The latter, well up on the outside all the way, finished well to outlast GALLANT RISK. The latter, slow to begin, closed a good gap while saving ground.

FOURTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,100; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Puett gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 3:30. Off 3:30. Winner, P. B. Codd's ch. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MAETRAN, $8.30, $5.10, $3.30; SALLIE KAY, $5.80, $3.70; BLARE, $3.10.

MAETRAN, under steadying restraint until well around the lower turn, shook off SALLIE KAY when ready and won as his rider pleased. SALLIE KAY, rushed to the front, showed good speed, but was no match for the winner in the going. BLARE gradually improved his position on the outside and outgamed PANJAB in the final drive. PANJAB was poorly ridden.

FIFTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,200; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. The Clearwater. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:58. Off 3:58½. Winner, C. H. Two-dollar mutuels paid—OFF GUARD, $23.00, $10.50, $5.30; NIGHT TIDE, $9.30, $4.90; FELSUN, $4.70.

OFF GUARD, on the outside and steadily restrained to the stretch run, came through on the inside and responded with determination to punishment to wear NIGHT TIDE down in the last stride. NIGHT TIDE held his opposition safe for speed, opened up a good lead entering the stretch, but weakened suddenly. FELSUN, rated off the early pace, shook off the others in the stretch run. WILLIAM PALMER made up ground in the last furlong. CERISSE III was kept on the inside in the deepest footing and was never a serious threat.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:26. Off 4:26½. Winner, Mrs. C. S. Bromley's ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SUNPHANTOM, $6.50, $3.70, $3.00; DINNER JACKET, $7.50, $4.60; GOSHEN, $4.00.

SUNPHANTOM outbroke the field, was eased off the pace while racing wide in the early running, assumed command entering the stretch, but then bore out sharply in the final furlong and carried DINNER JACKET out. May lodged a claim of foul against the winner, but it was disallowed. DINNER JACKET improved his position steadily on the outside and made a game effort. He would have been troublesome, but for being carried out. GOSHEN, well up and saving ground all the way, held on tenaciously when the real test came. IRISH MOON finished stoutly.

SEVENTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For maiden 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 4:56. Off 4:57½. Winner, Mrs. R. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MY ACE, $8.10, $4.10, $3.20; DUNLAD, $7.50, $3.70; LIMERICK, $3.40.

MY ACE, easily the best, opened up a long lead at his leisure and won with speed in reserve. DUNLAD gradually bettered his position while racing wide and outlasted LIMERICK. The latter finished with good courage between the leaders. AMEROSA came through on the inside to finish fastest of all but the winner and dead-heated POKER DICE for fourth place.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:24. Off 5:24. Winner, O. R. Two-dollar mutuels paid—RED ROGUE, $4.30, $2.90, $2.40; MAJOR-MINOR, $3.60, $2.80; CHAMELEON, $3.00.

RED ROGUE, reserved off the pace of the leaders in the early part, moved up on the outside rounding for home and had to be vigorously ridden out at the finish to gain the decision. MAJOR-MINOR forced the early pace, assumed command at the turn for home, but was not able to withstand the winner's bid. CHAMELEON closed fast after a slow beginning. SKATING FOOL raced evenly.

Dear Al:

Louise has gone to her reward. And many a statesman, legionnaire, and newspaper man knows he has lost a friend. As horses go, Louise was no great shucks. She never won a Kentucky Derby. She never won a blue ribbon. She never had a shoe on in her life. In fact, she never was off the farm that was her first home. But the world came to Louise. Down on the country place of Harvey Jacob, at Rock Point, Md., Louise lived and died. After 28 years on this earth, known as "the old gray mare" for at least 22 years, she held her court. When the folks were down from the city, Astor and Claude would go hunting Louise along the creek, in the woods or at the end of the tobacco field. She knew her role. She had rides for all. If a child was lifted on her back, Louise walked along gently. If a heavy, reckless rider mounted her she acted accordingly. Somewhere as her family tree was growing, one of Louise's ancestors must have ridden a general. Last summer, at 27 and with a dignified rider on her back, she strutted along, lifting her knees high—as self-important as a four-legged peacock. Louise never became a mother, nor was she, strictly speaking, an old maid. Denied by nature, she lavished motherly affection on Ginger, the pony, even to the extent of allowing the little fellow to share in late-summer fly protection afforded by her long, flowing tail. Last week, Louise began to get off her feed. Astor and Claude tried to tempt her but she would not eat. Yesterday, she lay down and went to sleep. Today she is mourned in the White House office, at the Press Club, at the Capital and right here in front of this typewriter. I'm letting Confucius and Art Brown rest this morning to say, "Good luck, Louise." BILL.

First race—Taut appears the best suited of those gathered for the day's opener. Arcaro will do the riding and I see no reason for starting the day with a loser. Tilaana breaks off the rail and has plenty of speed. Dangerous if well handled. R. Pinchot belongs with these.

Second race—Tony Weaver will be prominent if not the winner in company of this sort. I'm going to string along. Kleig Light has plenty of foot and will be in there knocking. Proud Lass should take care of the others.

Third race—Floragina gets in with only 105 pounds and with Jack Flinchum to do the saddle work. I'm going to be there for this payoff. Cardinalis is not overweighted and has a chance. Ghost Queen for the minor award.

Fourth race—Calexico has done about everything asked hereabouts and deserves the call in this field. Float Away and Marfue are good sprinters and will demand some attention here.

Fifth race—Charleinfeld and Flinchum appears to be the right combination in this event. The speedster is favored by the feather assignment. Wise Bee, another lightweight, will be there or thereabouts. Rapid Way won at the other track.

Sixth race—Cuckoo appears nicely placed in this route affair and also will have Flinchum in the saddle. Kievex may improve with the change of scenery and an off track would be right up his alley. Sun Mica for the show end.

Seventh race—Prince Splendor appears ready to carry 116 pounds to victory in this company. Needs only some saddle help. Our Bud and Bailiwick to fill out the money bracket.

Eighth race—El Puma and Satin Marvel promise to battle it out for the chief award in this field. I prefer them in the order named. Erech to show.

Substitute race—If this event is used, I'll take Rose Baby, Fly Me and Headin Home.

Howard Would Like 'Biscuit, Challedon Race

Weight-for-Age Race Suggested By Coast Turfman

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, March 6.—Seabiscuit would like to engage Challedon, the three-year-old champion of last year.

Charles S. Howard has told friends he would like to send his 'Biscuit, now seven years old, against Challedon on a weight-for-age basis.

The accepted scale of weights for the four-year-old, running a mile and one-quarter race, is 126 pounds. For a horse five years old or over, the weight also is 126 pounds. Challedon's owner, W. L. Brann, might balk at that.

But some enterprising track may be able to rig up that match race at a mile and one-sixteenth or more. C. M. Rood, chairman of the executive board at Hollywood Park, said his plant would be glad to furnish "the proper purse and other facilities for staging such a race, provided the challenge originated with Howard and Brann, the conditions to be agreed upon by them."

With Seabiscuit holding the all-time money winning record, a race between him and Challedon, pride of the East, probably would exceed in interest the match race between the 'Biscuit and War Admiral, in which the Howard horse won by four lengths at Pimlico, November 1, 1938.

Vanderbilt Prefers Stake Race for Event

Baltimore, March 6 (AP).—The Evening Sun quoted Alfred G. Vanderbilt today as saying he would prefer to see Seabiscuit and Challedon meet in a stake race such as the Dixie Handicap rather than in a match race.

Contacted in New York, Vanderbilt, president of both the Maryland Jockey Club and the Westchester Racing Association, pointed out that both horses had been nominated for the $20,000-added Dixie 'Cap at Pimlico May 8.

"It is in that race that I would like to see them meet," he said. At the same time denying reports he had made an offer for a $50,000 match race.

Vanderbilt added that if Owners C. S. Howard and W. L. Brann wanted a match race, he would be interested in arranging one, probably at Belmont Park, as that track could offer a larger purse than Pimlico.

Washington Hunt's 7th Point-to-Point Races March 16

The Warrenton Hunt will hold its seventh annual point-to-point races "somewhere in Virginia" on March 16. The exact time and place for the start will not be announced until March 15, so that prospective entrants will not be acquainted with the course.

Two races are on the card, one for individual riders over about 5 miles, and the other a pair race over about 6 miles. The races are open to members and landowners of the Warrenton Hunt and by invitation to members of recognized hunts, to be ridden by the owner or a member of his immediate family.

In the individual race, a trophy will be presented to the first member of the Warrenton Hunt to finish and another to the first rider finishing weighing over 190 pounds. In addition, a perpetual challenge trophy will go to the owner of the winner. Two pieces of silver will be given to the winning team in the pair race. Entry fees will be contributed to the Warrenton Hunt paneling fund.

Australian Horses To Compete Here

Los Angeles, March 6 (AP).—Australia's leading racing stable will be represented at Hollywood Park this summer.

J. F. MacKenzie, general manager of the Hollywood Turf Club, disclosed that W. J. Smith, owner of the $1,500,000 St. Aubins Stud of Sydney, had ordered four of the world's leading handicap horses, all owned by him, shipped here within the month.

Heading the handicappers is Beau Livre, sired by Beau Pere, which had won 11 consecutive stakes up to January 1.

This summer will mark the first appearance in the United States of Australian thoroughbreds since 1932, when the ill-fated Phar Lap invaded the West Coast.

Smith, glass and automobile manufacturer, is en route to Australia after completing arrangements for appearance of his horses here. He will return in time to see his horses race.

Injured Player Hurts Hockey Champs Chances

Cleveland, March 6 (AP).—The Cleveland Barons' hopes to repeat as Internatoinal-American Hockey League champions suffered a blow today in the loss of Fred Robertson, veteran defense mainstay, out with an ankle injury.

Rovers Ahead, 64-24

Grady Rovers 90-pound basketeers trounced the Merrick Boys Club 105-pound team, 64 to 24, yesterday at the latter's gym. Dave Wilson set the scoring pace for the winners with 14 points.

Atlas Grows 150 Per Cent In a Decade

Success Due to Investing in 'Special Situations,' Says Odlum

By the Associated Press

New York, March 6.—Floyd Bostwick Odlum, a sandy-haired young man from the West, matched wits and courage with hardened Wall Street dollar chasers in the depression years and came out of the race with the biggest investment trust in the country.

Today, as president of the Atlas Corporation, he informed shareholders in his annual report the asset value of the huge investment company's common stock had increased by more than 150 per cent in the last decade, rising from $5.06 a share at the end of 1929 to $12.80 at the close of 1939. Over the same period, he reminded stockholders, the share market generally lost 40 per cent of its quoted values.

The erstwhile Westerner who made a Wall Street name for himself in the grim years when many a financier went down to ruin attributed the "outstanding results" to the company's policy of "investing in special situations and of otherwise departing from the routine standard paths in the investment of funds." He ran Atlas up from a $15,000,000 company to a corporation with assets of $125,000,000.

Johns Manville $4.28 a Share

New York, March 6.—In a simplified annual report, the second of its kind he has issued "for the convenience of stockholders," Lewis H. Brown, president, reports that Johns-Manville Corporation earned a net profit in 1939 of $4,164,718.58.

The net was equivalent, after allowing $525,000 or $7 per share in dividends for holders of 75,000 shares of preferred stock, to $4.28 a share on 850,000 shares of common stock outstanding at the end of the year. The net profit in 1939 compared with $1,455,302.31 in 1938, which was equivalent, after preferred dividends, to $1.09 a share on the same number of shares of common stock.

Dividends of $2.75 per share were paid in 1939 on the 850,000 shares of common stock, aggregating $2,377,500, as compared to $425,000, or 50 cents per share, in 1938.

In the face of many elements which "if not offset would have increased production costs, Johns-Manville made no substantial increases in 1939 in the selling prices of its products," Mr. Brown reports. "Our company has made every effort to offset mounting costs by producing and selling goods with ever increasing efficiency."

Eastern Air $2.08 a Share

After making provisions of $678,123 for depreciation and amortization and $230,000 for estimated Federal income and excess profits taxes, Eastern Air Lines in 1939 earned a net profit of $883,824 or $2.08 per share, according to the company's annual financial statement made public today by Capt. E. V. Rickenbacker, president and general manager. The earnings of $2.06 per share for 1939 compared with a net profit of 85 cents per share for 1938.

"It is gratifying to note that a profit was earned during each month of the year for the first time in the history of the company," Capt. Rickenbacker reported.

Wheat Closes Lower After Nervous Day

Prices at One Stage a Cent Higher But End ⅛ to ¼ Lower

By the Associated Press

Chicago, March 6.—After a session of rapid fluctuations reflecting forecast of colder weather in the grain belt and estimates indicating some crop improvement the past three months, wheat prices closed today with little net overnight change.

At one stage quotations were a full cent higher but final figures were ⅛ lower to ¼ higher compared with the previous close, May, $1.03⅜@$1.03½; July, $1.00⅝@$1.00¾.

Profit taking based on the upturn yesterday and hedging of loan wheat accounted for some of the selling while the foreign political situation, with attention centered on Anglo-Italian relations, attracted buyers. Dust storms in some localities of the domestic Southwest and a good local shipping business also brought some strength to the pit.

Corn closed unchanged to ¼ up, May, 57; July, 57⅜; Oats, ⅜@⅝ up; rye, ¼@⅜ higher, and lard 2 lower to 2 higher.

All Groups Rise in Heavier Trading; Active Business Develops 67 New Highs; Long-Term Treasury Bonds Are Higher

New York, March 6.—An assortment of favorable business news and continued firmness of commodities attended another moderate advance in share prices today. This time gains were achieved on more substantial volume. Transfers rose to 855,030 shares to the joy of commission houses. Steels and motors made the best showings, but the recovery movement extended to all groups. The independent aircrafts moved ahead briskly on the eve of publication of several annual reports of leading companies. The list, as measured by the 100 stocks, ended 0.32 point higher.

Wheat withstood selling based on weather factors adjudged unfavorable to the long side and finished ⅜ off to ¼ cent higher. Cotton gained as much ground as on the previous day, ending 7 to 16 points up. Crude rubber futures were buoyant with buying believed to be based on an undercurrent of nervousness over the foreign situation and belief in the trade that domestic consumption may reach all-time high levels this year.

67 New Highs Recorded

Aside from improved volume, the broader type of trading and the recording of 67 new highs lent encouragement that financial markets are finally shaking off their lethargy and getting into the swing of spring. The 822 issues traded was the largest number of any day in quite a while. Optimistic trade news for the buying side included reports of large sales by the mail-order houses, an apparent record demand in February for new automobiles, estimates of betterment in car loadings, indications that the bottom may be near in steel output recession, and favorable statistical reports on power output. Aircrafts were aided, in addition to higher earnings and still rising backlogs, by the official figures on January exports which showed important increases.

Curtiss-Wright, which has been more or less stalemated around 10 in recent weeks, led the list on 33,900 shares with a net gain of ½ to close at 10⅞, and Canadian Pacific again attracted buyers. Its last price, of 6⅜, was ¼ higher for the day and about double its January-February low. Glenn L. Martin, up 1⅜, was again in the limelight. It has risen about 18 points from the low point.

Gainers for Day

Steel common, one of the few pivotals to show much activity, went above 59 for a gain of ⅜, but Bethlehem sold off a point following appearance of its quite favorable report for 1939. Gains of a point or more were recorded by such issues as American Airlines, Amerada, American Tobacco B. du Pont, General Outdoor Advertising, Hercules Powder, Inland Steel, United Carbon, and Wright Aeronautical. Some of the preferreds made wide gains on small sales, including American Tobacco 6 per cent preferred, Brooklyn Queens Transit preferred, Armour of Illinois prior preferred and National Biscuit 7 per cent preferred. American Telephone made a new high since 1937 in the early trading, but ended unchanged. It report for 1939 showed consolidated income at the highest levels since 1930.

Wall Street read with qualms the Washington reports of New Deal spending plans to include an enlarged work-relief program, restoration of farm-benefit payments and net increases in benefits paid out under the old-age insurance system. All are sure-fire vote getters. From the same source, it was suggested that the spending will be financed from two angles—the cash balance which the Treasury has accumulated, and "profit" represented by Treasury buying of silver at 35 cents to 77 cents an ounce and then declaring each ounce worth $1.29. No claim was made, however, to White House approval of the plans.

Bond Market Quiet But Firm

Listed bonds were in quiet demand today, and prices advanced in nearly all groups of issues. There was little disposition on the part of holders to sell, which made possible the gains on a modest volume of business. Treasury issues led the high group upward, and speculative bonds followed the equities division to better levels. Most foreign dollar securities also improved. The turnover was $6,680,000.

Long term United States Treasury bonds moved higher by 1-32 to 21-32 points, owing to the growing suspicion that $353,000,000 3⅜ per cent called bonds will simply be paid next June without refinancing. Guaranteed issues of the farm and home corporations also did well. Highest rated utility, railroad and industrial bonds were well maintained, with the advances restrained in view of impending new flotations.

Some Rail Bonds in Demand

Speculative railroad bonds were marked higher in most instances, the gains running to a point or more in some cases. But there were a few recessions, where special circumstances prevail. Local traction bonds were dull and not in the least inclined to follow the precedent set by some of the equities. Communications bonds made some progress, and a few other special groups also advanced.

$20,000,000 Elgin, Joliet Issue Offered

$17,700,000 of Total 3¼ Per Cent Bonds Are Priced at 101½%

An issue of $20,000,000, of which $17,700,000 is publicly offered, of Elgin, Joliet and Eastern Railway Co. first mortgage 3¼ per cent bonds, series A, is being offered today by a group of investment banking houses headed by Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. Associated with Morgan Stanley & Co. Inc., as principal underwriters, are: Harriman Ripley & Co. Inc., Smith, Barney & Co., The First Boston Corporation, Harris, Hall & Co., Inc., Glore, Forgan & Co., Central Republic Co., A. G. Becker & Co., Inc., and Blair, Bonner & Co.

Cotton Closes 20 to 50 Cents A Bale Lower

New York, March 6 (AP).—Small-caliber selling was enough to force cotton futures back today. While extreme losses were shaded a bit late in the session, closing prices were off 4 to 10 points.

Lower foreign markets paved the way for declines at the start. News of another increase in certificated stocks (cotton which may be delivered on a futures contract) attracted fire on the spot month and losses were extended.

Selling lessened near the finish and the list recovered a bit.

Stocks of certificated cotton have increased about 5,000 bales since the first of March and now amount to a little more than 10,000 bales.

In a trade devoted largely to switching from nearby to forward deliveries, cotton seed futures lost most of early gains and closed 2 points higher to 1 lower today.

Trade buying and last-minute covering in the March delivery lifted the entire list at the start, but profit taking cut into the advances.

Sales totaled 91 lots: March, 7.01 bid; May, 7.12 bid; July, 7.02; September, 7.26 bid; October, 7.26 bid.

Crude oil was quoted 6 cents a pound in the Southeast and valley and 5¾@5⅞ bid in Texas.

Bethlehem Steel Adds 25,000 Workers in Year

New York, March 6 (INS).—The Bethlehem Steel Co. reported today that 25,000 employes were added to its rolls in the past year, a record number for such a period.

In a report distributed to its employes, the company stated that average earnings per hour has reached the all-time high of 91.6 cents, more than 32 per cent above the levels of 1929.

"During the year 25,000 employes were added to the rolls," President E. G. Grace said in his annual message to the company's working force, "bringing the total force up to 110,000 at the end of 1939. There was an increase of approximately 17 per cent in employe average weekly working time. Total wage and salary payments amounted to nearly $159,000,000, an increase of $41,000,000 over the previous year."

ington players who figured in that double-play record, only Bloodworth remains a member of the infield.

The weakest member of the quartet at this writing is unquestionably Wasdell. Short of stature, he does not present a superior target at first base, and he has never been considered a fielding genius. But the Nats' bosses are positive of his improvement to the extent that they regard him now as a good fielder.

Travis, now at third, takes up that job after making a sensational success of the shortstop post, a tougher position to play. The Travis throwing arm is a vast improvement over Buddy Lewis' and throughout 1939 there never was any complaint of his handling of hard-hit ground balls.

The spark of the infield is provided by Rookie Jimmy Pohahl, who has been showing an ability to roam far and wide for ground balls. "Pofahl gets a great jump on the ball and he has a fine pair of hands," is Harris' tribute to the rookie. "He can't miss."

Jimmy Bloodworth, the darling of Washington fans last season after he supplanted the veteran Buddy Myer at second base, strangely shows none of his slow-footedness on the bases when he goes out to his second base job. Bloodworth's play has always been on the sensational side, and his arm does not suffer in comparison with Travis'. As the middle man on double plays, Griffith rates him as far superior to Myer.

Bloodworth is enthusiastic about playing alongside of Pofahl. "He's wonderful," said Bloodworth after today's workout. "I mean particularly on giving you the ball at second base. He always lets you see it, and it's your own fault if you can't take his throws. He never hides the ball on you by throwing out of his uniform."

Fayettesville Defeated by Howard, 71-58

Howard University's basketball team closed its 1940 intercollegiate season last night at the Howard gym with a 71-to-58 victory over Fayettesville Teachers, of Fayettesville, N. C., in a wild-scoring exhibition.

The Bison five jumped into a commanding lead at the start, staved off a late rally by the Teachers and were never headed. The game developed into a scoring spree with Billy Giles, Howard center, leading with 22 points.

James Carter, Washington boy playing on the visiting five, and Dave Stanley scored 15 each for Fayetteville, while Maurice Jackson was Howard's second high scorer with 12.

Women Can Save Pocket Billiards

After being graduated from Stroudsberg Teachers College, Miss McGinnis found the unemployment problem staring her in the face. She longed to be a teacher—still does, in fact—but along came the Brunswick Balke Co., makers of everything that has to do with pocket billiards, so her career began at that point.

Back home in Honesdale, Pa., was where Ruth first came upon billiards. Her father owned a billiard and bowling palace and taught her billiards at the tender age of 7. He was an expert, but she was beating him easily.

She travels six months of the year in every State of the Union giving two and three exhibitions a day. From Arcadia, she went to the Earle parlor last night. Her 1939-40 tour ends next month, and she won't see another billiard table until next fall, if she can help it. She'll play today at 2:30 and 7:30 p. m. at Lewis and Krauss, 817 Fourteenth street northwest.

"I don't believe in taking a 'postman's holiday.' I'm going to get just as far from pocket billiards as I can, play golf and a little tennis and just relax," she said. She insists every year she's retiring, but she always comes back.

Minor Teachers Beat State Rivals

Minor led all the way, with Tatum leading the scoring with 15 points. Perry, with 12, Mack with 13, and Boyd with 12 were Minor's other leaders. It was their ninth victory in 13 games.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Signing himself "Old Tar," a contributor sends a hand which caught his interest at his local duplicate game. No one bid four spades on the board, though the contract is a "laydown."

	♠ A K J 8 ♡ 10 8 7 ◇ K 10 ♣ K Q J 6
♠ 4 2 ♡ Q 6 3 ◇ J 8 7 5 2 ♣ A 3 2	WEST NORTH EAST SOUTH	♠ Q 5 3 ♡ A J 9 5 4 ◇ Q 9 4 ♣ 9 7
	♠ 10 9 7 6 ♡ K 2 ◇ A 6 3 ♣ 10 8 5 4

Writes "The Old Tar:" "Haven't played much duplicate lately, but went to a game last night. One of the outstanding hands, in my opinion, was the above. I sat North, dealer, and decided that my hand was too strong for a mere opening bid so decided to 'reverse' the bidding.

"I opened with one club; my partner bid two clubs. I now decided that it was unlikely she could support my spade suit, so instead of mentioning it, I hit on the bright bid of two no trump, which my partner raised to three.

"Needless to say four spades is a laydown, although at a five-table game no one bid game, but three teams played it in spades. Naturally we got a 'bottom.'"

"The Old Tar" may console himself; we saw a first-flight bridge player, a national champion, make the same mistake recently during an important tournament. We doubt very much if it would have happened in either case had "The Old Tar" and the expert been a little less eager to play the hand.

We all like to be declarer whether we are fitted for the role or not; it gives us a certain sense of power to control the fate of the two hands while partner sits passively looking on. Before we develop the habit of "bid grabbing" we should make certain that we are capable of handling the dummy properly. The wiser course is to direct the bidding to the best declaration regardless of which partner becomes declarer.

YESTERDAY'S ANSWER.

Listen!

with Slocum

You will be happy to learn, I hope, that beginning almost immediately there will be no further mention of "WJSV Week" in this minute portion of your favorite newspaper. I am almost certain that that will make the combination of Superman and Slocum responsible for even greater popularity for this page.

However, before laying the body away, lets say a few words on the doings tonight. At 10:15 the flower and chivalry of old Washington will gather in the auditorium of the National Press Club where a 45-minute program will officially launch WJSV as a 50,000-watter to the intense joy and relief of all concerned.

This broadcast, unlike most dedicatory radio programs, will be entertaining. There will only be one speech, that one brief (I hope) and the remainder of the time will be consumed by Paul Kain's Orchestra, Jane Froman, Prof. Quiz, Jerry Cooper, Garry Stevens and others. The speech will be by A. D. Willard, jr., general manager of WJSV and, as I said, it will be short.

Willard makes a very nice speech. As he is one of my innumerable bosses, it is quite possible I am not a fair critic on the subject of his speechmaking. I personally have listened to several, though, and find as bosses go, he makes a very fine speech. In any event, he'll do the honors and do 'em quickly.

When the boardcast is over, the flower and chivalry mentioned above will repair to the Hotel Willard for a buffet supper. I am opposed to the principle of buffet dining because it makes the guest do all the work and I feel self-conscious walking along a table with my dish dripping caviar all over the sliced Virginia ham. I am also forced at buffet affairs to set my drink down while I fetch fodder and in radio circles it's pretty fatal to set a drink down.

Anyhow, that's the bill for tonight. It will be the climax of "WJSV Week" and that's just dandy.

Another Nero Wolfe Story

BY REX STOUT

OVER MY DEAD BODY

Archie Goodwin, Nero Wolfe's confidential secretary, opened the door to a new mystery when he let a foreign-accented girl into the office. She demanded to see Wolfe and then showed unusual interest in a certain Balkan history. Orchid-doting Nero Wolfe was informed of this when Archie reported to the top-floor greenhouse. Archie also said her name was Carla Lovchen. At his customary hour of 11, Wolfe descended to his office and abruptly informed Carla that her name couldn't be Lovchen, but she parried the thrust. She had come to ask Wolfe's help for her friend, Neya Tormic, who was in trouble. They were both from Zagreb, she said, and each taught fencing at Nikola Miltan's studio. They would pay what they could, she added, but Wolfe said he was too busy.

Chapter 2

SHE HOPPED right over it. "I came instead of Neya because she has important lessons this morning and it is necessary we should keep our jobs. But you will have to see her of course, so you will have to go there, and anyway Miltan is arranging for everyone to be there together today, this afternoon, to settle it. It's the biggest nonsense anyone could imagine to suppose that Neva would put her hand in a man's pocket and steal diamonds, but it will be terrible if it happens the way Miltan says it will happen if the diamonds are not returned—but wait—you must let me tell you——"

My mouth was standing open in astonishment. After two hours on his feet in the plant rooms, when he came to the office at 11 o'clock and got lowered into his chair, with me there to annoy him pleasantly and the beer tray freshly delivered by Fritz Brenner, Wolfe was ordinarily as immovable as a two-ton boulder. But now he was rising; he was risen. With a mutter that might have been taken either for an excuse or an imprecation, and with no glance at either of us, he stalked out of the room, by the door that led to the hall. We watched him go and then the immigrant turned and let me have her eyes wide open.

I shook my head. "Eccentric." I explained. "I suppose you might call it a form of sickness, but it's nothing tangible like concussion of the brain or whooping cough. Once when a respectable lawyer was sitting in that very chair you're in now—yes, Fritz?"

The door which Wolfe had closed behind him had opened again and Fritz Brenner stood there with a bewildered look on his face.

"In the kitchen a moment, please, Archie."

I got up and excused myself and went to the kitchen. Preliminary preparations for lunch were scattered around on the big linoleum-covered table, but it was obvious that Wolfe had not been suddenly seized with a violent curiosity about food. He stood at the far side of the refrigerator, facing me in a determined manner that seemed entirely uncalled for, and told me abruptly as I entered:

"MY GOD!" I admit I blew up a little. "She said she'd pay something, didn't she? It's enough to freeze the blood of an alligator! If you read it in her eyes that her friend Neya did actually glumb the glass, you might at least——"

"Archie." It was about as hostile as his voice ever got. "I have skedaddled, physically, once in my life, from one person, and that was a Montenegrin woman. It was many years ago, but my nerves remember it. I neither desire nor intend to explain how I felt when that Montenegrin female voice in there said 'Hvala Bogu.' Send her away."

"But there's no——"

"Archie!"

I saw it was hopeless, though I had no idea whether he was overcome by terror or was staging a stunt. I gave it up and went back to the office and stood in front of her.

"Mr. Wolfe regrets that he will be unable to help your friend out of her trouble. He's busy."

Her head was tilted back to look up at me, and a little gasp left her mouth open. "But he can't—he must!" She jumped to her feet and I backed up a step as her eyes flashed at me. "We are from Tsernagora! She is—my friend is——" Indignation choked it off.

"It's final." I said brusquely. "He won't touch it. Sometimes I can change his mind for him, but there are limits. What does 'hvala Bogu' mean?"

She stared. "It means 'Thank God.' If I see him, tell him——"

"You shouldn't have said it. It gives him the willies to hear a Montenegrin female voice talk Montenegrin. It's a kind of allergy. I'm sorry, Miss Lovchen, but there's not a chance. I know him from A to P, which is as far as he goes. P is for pigheaded."

"But he—I must see him, tell him——"

She was stubborn enough herself so that it took five minutes to persuade her out, and since the only prejudice I had acquired against Montenegrin females up to that point was based merely on pronunciation, which is not after all vital, I didn't want to get rough. Finally I closed the front door behind her and went to the kitchen and announced sarcastically:

"I think it's safe now. Stay close behind me and if I holler run like hell."

Wolfe's inarticulate growl, as I wheeled and headed for the office, warned me that there was barbed wire in that neighborhood, so when he came in a few minutes later and got reestablished in his chair I made no effort to explain my viewpoint any further. He drank beer and fiddled around with a pile of catalogues, while I checked over a couple of invoices from Hoehn's and did some miscellaneous chores. When a little later he asked me to please open the window a crack, I knew the tension was relaxing toward normal.

BUT IF EITHER or both of us had any idea that we were through with the Balkans for that day, it wasn't long before we had it jostled out of us. It was customary for Fritz to answer the doorbell from 11 on, when I was in the office with Wolfe. Around 12:30 he came in, advanced the usual three paces, stood formally and announced a caller named Stahl who would not declare his business but stated that he was an agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

I let out a low whistle and ejaculated cautiously, "Aha!" Wolfe opened his eyes a trifle and nodded, and Fritz went for the caller.

We hadn't bumped into a G-man before in the course of business, and when he entered I did him the honor of swiveling clear around for a look. He was all right, medium-sized, with good shoulders and good eyes, a little skimpy in the jaw, and he needed a shoeshine. He told us his name again and shook hands with both of us, and took from his pocket a little leather case which he flipped open and exhibited to Wolfe with a reserved but friendly smile.

"My credentials," he explained in an educated voice. He certainly had fine manners, something on the order of a high-class insurance salesman.

Wolfe glanced at the exhibit, nodded, and indicated a chair. "Well, sir!"

The G-man looked politely apologetic. "We're sorry to bother you, Mr. Wolfe, but it's our job. I'd like to ask whether you are acquainted with the Federal statute which recently went into effect, requiring persons who are agents in this country of foreign principals to register with the Department of State."

"Not intimately. I read newspapers. I read about that some time ago."

"Then you know of that law?"

"I do."

"Have you registered?"

"No. I am not an agent of a foreign principal."

The G-man threw one knee over the other. "The law applies to agents of foreign firms, individuals or organizations, as well as to foreign governments."

"So I understand."

"It also applies, here, both to aliens and to citizens. Are you a citizen of the United States?"

"I am. I was born in this country."

"You were at one time an agent of the Austrian government?"

"Briefly, as a boy. Not here, abroad. I quit."

"And joined the Montenegrin army?"

"Later, but still a boy. I then believed that all misguided or cruel people should be shot, and I shot some. I starved to death in 1916."

The G-man looked startled. "I beg your pardon?"

"I said I starved to death. When the Austrians came and we fought machine guns with fingernails. Logically I was dead; a man can't live on dry grass. Actually I went on breathing. When the United States entered the war and I walked 600 miles to join the A. E. F., I ate again. When it ended I returned to the Balkans, shed another illusion, and came back to America."

"Hvala Bogu," I put it brightly.

Stahl, startled again, shot me a glance. "I beg your pardon? Are you a Montenegrin?"

"Nope. Pure Ohio. The ejaculation was involuntary."

WOLFE, ignoring me, went on, "I would like to say, Mr. Stahl, that my temperament would incline me to resent and resist an attempt by any individual to inquire into my personal history or affairs, but I do not regard you as an individual. Naturally. You represent the Federal Government. You are, in effect, America itself sitting in my office wanting to know something about me, and I am so acutely grateful to my native country for the decencies it still manages to preserve . . . by the way, would you care for a glass of American beer?"

"No, thank you."

Wolfe pushed the button and leaned back. He grunted. "To your question, sir: I represent no foreign principal, firm, individual, organization, dictator, or government. Occasionally I pursue inquiries here, professionally as a detective, on requests from Europe, chiefly from Mr. Ethelbert Hitchcock of London, an English confrere, as he does there for me. I am pursuing none at present. I am not an agent of Mr. Hitchcock or of anyone else."

"I see." Stahl sounded open to conviction. "That's definite enough. But your early experiences in Europe . . . may I ask . . . do you know a Prince Donevitch?"

"I knew him long ago. He's getting ready to die, I believe, in Paris."

"I don't mean him. Isn't there another one?"

"There is. Old Peter's nephew, Prince Stefan Donevitch. I believe he lives in Zagreb. When I was there in 1916 he was a 6-year-old boy."

"Have you communicated with him recently?"

"No. I never have."

"Have you sent money to him or to anyone or any organization for him—or the cause he represents?"

"No, sir."

"You do make remittances to Europe, don't you?"

"I do." Wolfe grimaced. "From my own funds, earned at my trade. I have contributed to the Loyalists in Spain. I send money occasionally to the—translated, it is the League of Yugoslavian Youth. Prince Stefan Donevitch assuredly has no connection with that."

"I wouldn't know. What about your wife? Were'nt you married?"

"No. Married? No. That was what——" Wolfe stirred, as under restraint, in his chair. "It strikes me, sir, that you are nearing the point where even a grateful American might tell you to go to the devil."

I put in emphatically, "I know damn well I would, and I'm only a sixty-fourth Indian."

The G-man smiled and uncrossed his legs. "I suppose," he said amiably, "you'd have no objection to putting this in the form of a signed statement. What you've told me."

"Good. You represent no foreign principal, directly or indirectly?"

"That is correct."

"Well, that's all we wanted to know." He got up. "At present. Thank you very much."

"You're quite welcome. Good day, sir."

I followed him out, to open the front door for America and make sure he was on the proper side of it when it was closed again. Wolfe could get sentimental about it if he wanted to, but I don't like any stranger nosing around my private affairs, let alone a nation of 130,000,000 people. When I returned to the office he was sitting back with his eyes closed.

"You see what happens," I told him bitterly. "Just because you rake in two fat fees and the bank account is momentarily bloated, in the space of three weeks you refuse nine cases. Not counting the poor little immigrant girl with a friend who likes diamonds. You refuse to investigate anything for anybody. Then what happens? America gets suspicious because it's un-American not to make all the money you can, and sicks a senior G-man on you, and now, by God, you're going to have to investigate yourself! You don't need——"

"Archie." Shut up." His eyes opened. "You're a liar. Since when have you been a sixty-fourth Indian?"

Before I could parry his counter-attack Fritz appeared to announce lunch. I knew it was to warmed-over duck scraps, so I was off at the gun.
